...ILL MAKE A TEST

...f the Prize Fighting Law of the State of Arkansas.

...ORBETT PLACED UNDER ARREST

...rrant Issued From Justice Kirk's Court - Charged With Conspiring to Bat... the Person of One Bob Fitzsimmons. His Attorneys Will Sue Out a Writ of Habeas Corpus Asking His Release.

...T SPRINGS, Ark., Oct. 18.—An ...ening paper has summarized the Cor... Fitzsimmons matter up to 6 o'clock ...s evening as follows:

...Unless there is a hitch as to the agree... ...tween the principals the indica... ...ns are that Corbett and Fitzsimmons ...ill meet in a glove contest in this city ...decide the superiority between the ...o. That is the latest status of the ...tter as sized up here in view of all ...current circumstances. The aban... ...ment by the promoters of any and ...l further efforts to bring the men to... ...ether under conditions which are pro... ...ited by the laws of the state changes ...e whole aspect of the case from a ...gal standpoint and so far as official in... ...terference is concerned.

...Should the local authorities conclude ...at the contest can be brought off ...nder conditions which will not war... ...nt interference it will take place, un... ...ss the principals or one of them should ...decline to fight under such arrange... ...ents. To such a contest there will not ...nd could not be any lawful interfer... ...nce by force from the state authorities ...outside of this county. Governor Clarke ...as in the city Wednesday and con... ...ferred with officials and citizens freely ...n the situation. While firm, and still ...asserted that his position was un... ...hanged, he was never in a better mood ...o all appearances. The conferences ...were held behind closed doors—a thing ...now is when and where open questions ...of public interest are discussed. No re... ...porters were admitted, and secrecy was ...enjoined on the favored ones present. ...But the thing leaked out, as all such ...things invariably do, and The News is ...warranted in stating authoritatively ...that while asserting that he would tol... ...erate no organized plan to violate the ...laws of the state, and while he does not ...know the difference, if any, from a legal ...standpoint, between a glove contest and ...a prize fight, the governor is willing to ...refer the whole question to the legal ...authorities for determination, and abide ...by their action.

...A warrant against James J. Corbett ...was issued from Justice Kirk's court at ...o'clock yesterday afternoon. It charges ...that he has threatened, is conspiring ...and is about to commit an unlawful as... ...sault upon the person of one Robert ...Fitzsimmons. It was placed in the ...hands of Sheriff Houpt, who proceeded ...to the Arlington hotel and served it. ...The warrant was issued at the instance ...of Prosecuting Attorney C. V. Teague. ...Corbett was brought into court by the ...sheriff and the prosecuting attorney ...asked that he be put under bond to keep ...the peace. Justice Kirk made the order, ...as asked, placing the bond at $10,000. ...Corbett refused to give bond, and his ...attorneys, Martin & Greaves, through ...Mr. Martin, will sue out a writ of ...habeas corpus before Chancellor Leath... ...erman asking for his release. This will ...bring the question up for judicial hear... ...ing as to whether a glove contest, such ...as is now proposed, will be a violation ...of the state statutes. If the court de... ...cides that it is not, it is believed that ...the authorities will respect the decision, ...but if to the contrary, it is thought the ...whole matter will be abandoned.

May Be Pulled Off In Mexico.

...EL PASO, Tex., Oct. 18.—Dispatches ...received from Hot Springs encourage ...the idea that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons ...fight may be pulled off in Juarez, Mex... ...ico, but the management will make no ...official announcement.

Horseless Vehicles.

...CLEVELAND, Oct. 18.—A good part of ...yesterday's session of the carriage build... ...ers was given up to the reading of a ...paper on horseless vehicles by W. B. ...Templeton of New York. Mr. Temple... ...ton reviewed the history of the efforts ...in the line of inventions to supercede ...the horse, and he predicted that it ...would still be many years before horse... ...less vehicles were used for anything but ...pleasure.

A Mountain Malady.

...SHELBYVILLE, Ky., Oct. 18.—Reports have ...just been received here from northern ...Lincoln county near the Letcher line, that ...a terrible epidemic of a disease similar ...to Cuba has been raging there for the ...last two weeks. LYNCHING FROLIC

Beguiles the Time of the South Carolina Chivalry.

HAMPTON, S. C., Oct. 18.—William Blake, Sr., Jason Blake, Prince Graves and William Frazier were convicted last evening of the murder of Mr. Raymond Meares on Aug. 9 last. William Blake, Sr. was recommended to the mercy of the court and his sentence was life imprisonment. The other three were sentenced to be hanged on Dec. 6 next. After the prisoners were sentenced it was evident that there was dissatisfaction at the jury's recommendation to mercy of William Blake, Sr., and some persons were heard to say that Blake would never reach the penitentiary. The convicted men, as soon as court adjourned, about 7:30 o'clock, were handcuffed and taken out of the courtroom.

On their way to the jail, within a few feet of the prison, the sheriff and his constables were overpowered by a number of men and William Blake, Sr., and William Frazier, who were handcuffed together, were forced from the custody of the constables and taken into the woods. The handcuffs were unlocked in some way and Frazier was returned to the custody of the jailer.

The crowd, numbering about 50 men, proceeded to a dense piece of woods about half a mile from the courthouse and hung William Blake, Sr., with a plow line, to a limb of a large pine tree. Several shots were fired into his body and the crowd dispersed.

STILL LAWING.

Suit Brought by Belden Against Burke and His Associates.

ALBANY, Oct. 18.—There was placed on the court of appeals calendar yesterday for argument the important case of Belden against Burke and others, but when the court adjourned at 2 o'clock it had not been reached and was put over until next week. The action was brought by bondholders of the Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railroad company to compel the Central Trust company to see that the proceeds of $8,000,000 in bonds of the road, which, it is claimed, were misappropriated by ex-Judge Stevenson Burke and his associates, be applied to the purposes of the road.

TERROR OF THE SEA.

One of the Oregon's Monster Guns Ready to Be Placed In Position.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 18.—The biggest gun ever seen in San Francisco or in any other port of the United States is in the railway yards. The gun which is for the Oregon is heavier by 10 tons than the Monterey's "Big Betsey" and four of the same pattern are to occupy the two main turrets of the battleship.

This mammoth gun is 40 feet long and weighs 157,000 pounds. It throws a projectile weighing 1,100 pounds a distance of 13 miles with sufficient force to pierce any foreign armor. It requires 550 pounds of powder for a single shot.

FOR THE FOURTH TIME

Pingree Wins the Nomination For Mayor of Detroit.

DETROIT, Oct. 18.—After a hot and decidedly acrimonious campaign preliminary to the Republican city caucuses, Mayor Pingree has won the nomination for a fourth term as mayor of Detroit, hands down. It was expected that the caucuses, which were held yesterday afternoon and evening, would develop some large sized rows, but nothing of the sort occurred although Pingree's opponent, James Vernor, had many workers at the polls.

Active Volcano In Washington.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., Oct. 18.—An active volcano is supposed to be in a state of eruption in the Olympic mountains south of this city. Crossing the straits from Victoria Professor Alexander of the Smithsonian institute observed the phenomena through marine glasses and is positive that the smoke and steam he saw came from a volcano.

Killed by a Train.

PORTLAND, Ind., Oct. 18.—Yesterday morning two tramps discovered the body of a man lying between the rails on a trestle in this city. The body was nearly cut to pieces. He was identified by an envelope in his pocket which bore the address of John P. Thackery of North Baltimore, O.

A Thing of the Past.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The military reservation at Fort Stanton, N. M., is to be abandoned. The secretary of the interior has informed the secretary of war that it is no longer necessary for protection against the Indians and its usefulness has become a thing of the past.

WILY JOHN BULL

Knows Exactly What the Monroe Doctrine Is.

ONLY SCHEMING TO GAIN TIME

To Form an Alliance With Other Powers Who May Want to Take a Slice Off Some of the American Republics—Note of Secretary Olney Will Require Time For Its Consideration.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Even after the practical confirmation from British sources of the statement that the state department had addressed a strong letter upon the Venezuelan boundary dispute to Ambassador Bayard for delivery to the British foreign office, the officials at the state department refused to make any admission touching the subject.

The guarded and evidently inspired comment of the leading British newspaper upon this letter has attracted serious attention among the diplomatic body here, and they see in it a good deal of significance and possibly a threat of grave complications to follow.

The statement that is held to be of particular significance is that the British government regards the views set forth in Secretary Olney's letter as so important that a long time must be taken for its consideration.

As there is nothing new to Great Britain, especially in an enunciation in a mild form of the Monroe doctrine, it is assumed here that the only purpose of delaying a response, which the terms of the letter indicated would be gratefully received if sent promptly, is to afford the British government an opportunity to consult some of the other great European powers on this subject.

Most of these powers are concerned in the fortunes of American states—some directly, as France and Spain—through their colonial possessions, and others through heavy investments of their citizens in securities and concessions.

The doctrine laid down by Secretary Olney, if carried to its logical conclusion, probably would estop any interference by force on the part of a European power in the affairs of an American republic, and also, as in the case of Venezuela, which may find a parallel in the case of the boundary dispute between France and Brazil, prevent any of these European nations from extending their colonial possessions in this hemisphere.

Therefore, it is believed by some diplomats here to be within the range of possibility that Great Britain may have in contemplation a union with some of the other European powers in a joint refusal to accept the doctrine laid down by Monroe.

POSTOFFICE BURGLARS.

Who Escaped From Ludlow Street Jail Arrested In Bruges, Belgium.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—A special to The Herald from Washington says: Harry Russell, one of the notorious postoffice burglars who startled the country by their sensational escape from the Ludlow street jail in New York on July 4, has been arrested in Bruges, Belgium.

Two other men and a woman were arrested with him, and these men are supposed to be Joe Killoran and Charlie Allen, who were arrested with Russell and escaped from the jail with him. Secretary Olney sent a cablegram to Minister Ewing in Brussels, directing him to request the Belgian authorities to hold all the men.

CASHIER SHORT $15,000.

All the Bills of Large Denomination and Gold Coin Gone.

DULUTH, Oct. 18.—C. H. Stuckey, cashier of the state bank, is missing and with him $15,000 of the bank's cash. He locked the safe and closed the bank as usual Wednesday evening and everything was supposed to be right. He did not put in an appearance at his accustomed time yesterday morning, however, and when the safe was opened it was discovered that all the bills of large denomination and all the gold coin was gone.

Will Defend Oregon's Lien Law.

DETROIT, Oct. 18.—Two hundred dollars was subscribed personally by delegates to the American Horseshoers' convention to prosecute a case which is designed to uphold the constitutionality of the lien law of Oregon, in a case involving possession of some horses which had been sold for debt under the act.

The Latest Combine.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 18.—Representatives of a number of leading clothespin factories of the country met here yesterday and formed a combination to be known as the American Manufacturing company. The number of clothespins made in this country exceeds 500,000,000 a year.

Shot His Wife and Killed Himself.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—John H. Bowen, 55, who for several years has been a clerk in the mercantile appraiser's office, shot his wife, attempted to shoot his son and then shot himself yesterday at their home.

Sympathy With Cuba.

BUFFALO, Oct. 18.—At yesterday's meeting of the Union Veteran legion a resolution of sympathy with Cuba in her struggle with Spain was introduced by Colonel W. S. Underwood of West Chester, Pa., and unanimously adopted.

BETTER TO MEET SEPARATELY.

Abstract of Letter of Pope Leo Bearing on Religious Congresses.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 18. — Archbishop Katzer has received a copy of the letter of Pope Leo sent to Mgr. Satolli bearing on religious congresses. From the tone of the letter it would seem evident that in the future Catholics will not meet with Protestant bodies, but conduct their conventions separately, though open to all, with the privilege of allowing the members of other denominations to ask any questions they may see fit. No reference is made to the world's religious congress in particular.

The document is typewritten in Latin and addressed to Mgr. Satolli. It simply states that the knowledge of such conventions being held has come to the attention of the pope, and he expresses the conviction that it would be better for Catholics to meet separately.

THE INDIANS WILL DRINK.

They Make Their Own Beer and Pay Their Fines For It.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 18.—The schooner Alexander has just returned from Kodiak with furs for the North American Commercial company. Captain Bowen says the United States commissioner at St. Paul has attempted the task of preventing the natives from drinking "siwash" beer, which they manufacture from sugar, water and hops. Judge Edwards' remedy is the imposition of $50 fine for getting drunk. The Indians all worked at gathering sea otter during the season and they all came home with lots of money. There are but 400 souls in the settlement and the fines have almost gone around by this time, so that the government and the Alaskan Commercial company have collected about all there is in sight. The Indians still drink.

DRUSES AND MUTUALIS

Indulge In Conflicts Which May Lead to Serious Results.

BEYROUT, Syria, Oct. 18.—Considerable excitement prevails in the Lebanon district owing to conflicts which have taken place between the Druses and Mutualis, in which men have been killed on both sides. Finally the Mutualis assembled 4,000 armed men near Sidon with the intention of attacking the Druses. The latter thereupon appealed to the conciliationists in Hauran, who are preparing to send 8,000 men to the assistance of the Druses. The Vali of Damascus is trying to prevent a conflict.

REPORTED DOUBLE LYNCHING.

A White Man and a Colored Woman Hanged Near Gratz, Ky.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Oct. 18.—Reports reached here of the hanging of James Willis and Susie Bottoms, colored, with whom he was living near Gratz, Ky. Several parties who came up the river yesterday say the bodies are still hanging where the mob left them. Willis and the colored woman were ordered out of the city by the police judge about a month ago, and they took a shanty boat and went down the river.

Found Unconscious.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—A white man, about 45, was found in an unconscious condition yesterday on the long bridge, having suffered from an attack of apoplexy. He is believed to be Frank Smith, formerly a government clerk here. His family are thought to be at Richwood, Boone county, Ky.

GENERAL CAMPOS

Deposed, Killed, Captured or Insane.

VARIOUS RUMORS CIRCULATED.

Should Any of the Reports Prove True He Will Be Succeeded by General Polavejo, the Relentless Foe of the Cubans—A Number of Small Engagements Reported.

JAKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 18.—A special to The Citizen from Tampa, Fla., says: Yesterday reports were circulated that the Spanish consul had received an official cable that General Campos was no longer commanding the military affairs in Cuba. The inference was that Campos was either deposed, killed or captured by the insurgents. The Spanish consul emphatically denied the report. Passengers arriving from Cuba report General Campos in Santiago completely insane. This connects strangely with Wednesday's rumor, of which the papers last night had no intimation. Should this be true, General Polaviejo will probably be sent to Cuba and a vigorous policy pursued. Cubans know him as a relentless foe.

Skirmishing.

HAVANA, Oct. 18.—A column of troops commanded by Colonel Zamora has had a fight with a band of insurgents, led by Romeu, at Cesta Blanca. The insurgents retreated, leaving five killed and 12 wounded, among the latter being Chief Carreras. The troops lost one wounded.

A detachment of troops left in the direction of Canasi, where it is said a band of insurgents numbering 50 has been raised. Cavalry is now being dispatched in pursuit.

The insurgents have attacked Occintania plantation at Macagua, in the province of Matanzas, which is the property of Americans. The insurgents carried away all the weapons found on the place.

Senor Gasset, editor of the Madrid Imparcial, arrived at Havana yesterday with the purpose of investigating the real situation of the island.

Brigadier General Oliver with 200 infantry met the insurgents with a force of 300 infantry and 50 cavalry at Resbalosa, in the province of Santa Clara. The insurgents stood the firing of the troops for 30 minutes, retreating to the woods after they had charged the Spanish with cavalry and infantry, the latter with fixed bayonets. The insurgents left upon the field five killed and 10 horses, and carried with them in their retreat many killed and wounded. Of the troops the official report says that only two were wounded.

Insurgents Encouraged.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 18. -Senor A. G. DeArango of this city has received a letter from a New York friend, whose name he refuses to divulge, saying that a Cuban spy arrived in that city last Tuesday direct from the battlefields in Cuba. This spy declares, the letter states, that the revolutionists have been much encouraged by recent successes and all feel certain that the dawn of Cuban independence has already appeared.

THURSDAY NIGHT FIRE.

Martin Miller Suffers a Loss by the Burning of His Barn and Contents.

Thursday night, at 10:50 o'clock the fire department was called out by a fire in the extreme northern part of the town.

After a long and hard run the central department made out that the barn of Martin Miller of north Main street was in flames.

As the hydrant nearest to the fire was at the corner of Patten and Wallace streets the end of the line was pulled out of the wagon and attached at that place, but the line when completely run out reached only a little over half way to the fire, and the department left the line of hose lying in the road and drove on into the field between the house and the barn to save the house from the sparks which were falling upon the roof

Ladders were raised and, by the use of the hand chemicals, the roof was completely wetted but no attempt was made to save the barn as it was almost gutted by the time the department was on the scene and shortly the framework of the large structure fell in with a crash.

The barn with its contents, consisting of four tons of hay, a buggy and harness, some furniture and clothing stored away, and the chicken coop and granary nearby was a total loss, amounting probably to $1500, insured for $1000 in the Northwestern National of Milwaukee.

Mr. Miller was seen by a STAR man and asked if he could account for the fire and the gentleman stated that there had been no fire or light used about the barn and he could only conjecture that the barn had been set afire by tramps.

He said that his son, Cliff, had gone up into the hay mow Thursday morning to fill a straw tick and had found where some tramps had taken bed clothes and carpets from the floor below and made for themselves nice beds. That his son had taken the carpets and bedding down stairs and on his Mr. Miller's orders locked the barn and that it might be that the tramps had set fire to it out of revenge.

LARUE STREET FAIR

IT IS A BIG SUCCESS FROM OPENING TO THE CLOSE.

The Attendance Thursday Estimated at Between Six and Seven Thousand—Everybody Is Delighted With the Big Exhibition.

LaRue promised visitors a big thing in the way of a street fair but she didn't even begin to tell us all that she was about to offer. It is even probable that the fair was better and larger and in all ways more interesting than even the citizens of LaRue expected it to be.

That the people of Marion county are capable of appreciating a good thing was evidenced by the attendance at the fair when conservative estimates put the attendance any place from six to seven thousand Thursday, and the attendance on other days was correspondingly good.

Going through the exhibits the visitor is at once impressed with the fact that a dangerous competitor to the county fair has sprung up in this same street fair at LaRue. While the exhibits may not be quite as extensive they are every bit as good and so condensed as to make the very best showing.

Those who were not present can best understand what the fair was like when told that it occupied the main street of the town for four or five blocks and the side streets approaching it.

Here might be seen the very best imaginable exhibits of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, various mechanical devices, buggies and carriages and almost anything and everything which has become familiar to the eye at our county fair.

Then there were shows of all kinds from "The Battle of Gettysburg" at one end of the street to the smallest fake show at the other. In fact there were almost as many shows as there were fakirs and the fakirs were legion.

Another thing which made the fair of interest to the sight-seer was the horde of politicians present and every one of 'em was working with all his might to encompass the only great cause, his own.

They were just about all there. The STAR man saw Upton K. Guthery, and Joe Shaw, and Will Falk and Bailie Hord and then in rapid succession Moore, Hensley, Asa Gardner, Virden and Morral.

You never saw anything like it. The politicians made a show by themselves, and were fully as interesting in their mad endeavor to corral votes as the fair itself.

The street fair was not, however, without speed trials for the track was the scene of some first-class races both Thursday and today, which were heartily enjoyed by thousands.

All in all it was a great fair and if the citizens of LaRue make good their threat to make next year's exhibition superior to that of this fall, the Agricultural society will have to get a hustle on itself to make people realize that the great fair is held at Marion.

ROBBED AT LARUE.

William Conaway, Candidate for Infirmary Director, Relieved.

While at the depot at LaRue, Thursday evening, to take the train for his home in Caledonia, Wm. Conaway, candidate on the republican ticket for infirmary director, was touched for his pocketbook, containing about ten dollars, and his watch and chain.

A clever stranger worked him in the crowd and Mr. Conaway was compelled to borrow his fare home from a friend.

OBITUARY.

WALTERS—Rowena Margaret, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Walters, was born February 27, 1876, and died October 13, 1895, aged 19 years, 7 months and 16 days.

Rowie fell a victim to typhoid fever and after three weeks' patient suffering succumbed to the ravages of that dread disease. From the beginning of her sickness, recovery was confidently expected, as kind hands and loving hearts anticipated her every wish and administered to her wants. Through medical skill and careful nursing the fever was overcome, but in a sad hour inflammation of the brain set in and completed the direful work which the fever began.

If "Death loves a shining mark" it made no mistake in its choice at this time. Rowie, always kind and true, three years ago became a faithful christian. May 1st, 1892, she followed her Lord and Master in baptism, uniting with the Freewill Baptist church at Grand Prairie, and ever remained a consistent member until called to the triumphant church above. During her sickness she did nor murmur because of her lot, but seemed constantly planning for the good of others. Many times she earnestly prayed for her Sunday school, which she had so faithfully served.

The bereaved parents and four sorrowing sisters have the sympathy of the entire community.

The funeral was held at the home of her parents at 1 p m. Tuesday, October 15th, 1895, conducted by Rev. A. E. Toothacre assisted by Rev. D. B. Martin, of Marion. Excellent music was rendered by Marion friends. The floral tributes of her Sunday school and friends were beautiful and expressive. The great number of persons present at the funeral service attest the high regard in which she was held by all. Her spirit has gone to its heavenly home, but her body rests in the beautiful cemetery at Marion.

SAVED BY HIS ELOQUENCE.

Johnson's Simple and Unaffected Oratory Obtained His Discharge.

James Johnson, a middle aged negro, was arraigned a few days ago in Jefferson Market court, New York, for being drunk in Bleecker street. He wore a black Prince Albert coat and patent leather shoes. His trousers were yellow and tight fitting. Each leg was adorned by a big red stripe. His black derby hat had a white silk band around it. His vest would have put a prize cake walker to shame. It contained all the colors of the rainbow. When Magistrate Crane gave him an opportunity for explanation he grabbed the iron railing to steady himself, and said in a loud voice: "Your honor, the ability to write poetry and the power to abstain from intoxicating beverages are gifts neither of which I possess. I admit that I sought oblivion in the flowing bowl last night, but I did it to soothe the stings caused by the outrageous shafts of fortune. I'm in hard luck. I belonged to that unparalleled aggregation of histrionic talent known to an unfeeling public as Comstock's Mastodon Genuine Colored Minstrels. We had a two weeks' career, which I might call meteoric. Then our lights went out, figuratively speaking, and we, the only genuine colored minstrels, were left stranded high and dry. I got tired of being dry and got drunk.

"Your honor," continued Johnson, getting his breath, "this happened at Port Jervis, N. Y. After many vicissitudinous experiences, too numerous to mention, I reached this city last night. I met several of my friends, and they were so overwhelmed with joy at my safe return that they treated me not wisely, but too well. This is the result.

"These garments in which I stand before your honor, covered with confusion and shame, were worn by me in our unparalleled street parades, which electrified all beholders and several times compelled street cars to take another route. If your honor will let me go I'll promise you that you won't see me again unless you honor me by coming to witness my unparalleled performance as the unapproachable interlocutor in the mammoth aggregation of Ethiopian wonders—a company I am now forming."

Johnson was discharged.—New York Sun.

UNFIT FOR READING.

Iowa Authorities Declare Against Dickens and Scott.

The destruction of the literary works of Dickens and Thackeray and Sir Walter Scott's Waverley novels as immoral, obscene and unfit to be in a township library, says a Cedar Rapids dispatch, may not be thought possible in this great state of Iowa, with its 2,000,000 citizens, whose superior general intelligence is acknowledged and admired throughout civilization, and where the degree of illiteracy is the smallest in the entire world. But it is true—at least different citizens of the community in and about which it happened make positive declarations to that effect.

It is said to have been done by the township trustees of Richland township, Dickinson county. Spirit Lake is in that township. The story goes that a committee of two, named Wade and Cushman, examined the works of the great novelists, condemned them and destroyed them as immoral. It seems like a dream, but the informants are men of character and prominence, and it is believed to be safe to make the statement that the books mentioned were taken from the library and burned, and that the "reformers" went about their work in the same spirit as did the witch burners and the destroyers of early Christians.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

"I Am Dying, Egypt, Dying."

General Lytle did not write his famous poem the night before he died, though there is a superstition that he did so. A few years ago a friend sent me a copy of a Nashville paper of 1858, containing the complete poem. Appleton's "Cyclopedia of American Biography" says it was written in 1857.

Since the time of Koerner, if not from an earlier time, it has been customary to assume that any song written by a soldier since dead was composed the evening before he died. So we have Lytle's "I Am Dying, Egypt, Dying," and Williamson's "Stonewall Jackson's Way," the latter wrongly ascribed to a Major King. It is almost a wonder that we haven't had history reconstructed to allow of General Dix dying in battle the day after he finished his translation of "Dies Irae," but probably we shall have that yet.—Letter to New York Sun.

How General Miles Got It.

There is no harm in giving a little of the secret history of General Miles' promotion. President Cleveland did not want to promote Miles. He did want to promote General Ruger, letting Miles take his turn later on. General Miles has been fortunate in making friends, throughout his career, and these friends many of them men of prominence and influence, came to the front in his behalf during the last two months. These good friends, among them a number of Chicago men, convinced Secretary Lamont that Miles ought to have the honor. Lamont, in turn, though not without some difficulty, convinced President Cleveland. Miles won, but it was a close decision on the part of the umpire. —Washington Cor. Chicago Times-Herald.

SHE'S NO SASSENACH.

But Mrs. Coffey, Although 104 Years Old, Wants a Husband.

A quaint little old woman, whose gray hair, thick as that of a girl, fell in confusion over her broad and wrinkled forehead from under the scalloped rim of an old fashioned cap, landed the other day at the barge office pier from the Ellis Island boat. She was accompanied by her youngest daughter, Catherine Coffey of Plainfield, Conn., who is about 60 years old.

Detective Peter Groden saw the little old woman sitting on a part of her baggage munching an apple. He heard her talking in Gaelic, and he went over and spoke to her. It is not often that Peter, who is fluent in Gaelic, gets a chance to exchange sentiments with a primitive Celt. He was surprised when the old woman who is Mrs. Mary Coffey of County Kerry, told him that she was 104 years old. He asked her how she fixed the date of her birth, and she said from the invasion of Ireland by the French under General Humbert. This occurred in 1798, and Mrs. Coffey says she was then a girl of 7. She said she did not remember much about the invasion except that, like Wordsworth's little maid, she was 7.

When Peter asked her why she had come to America, she said with a dry smile and a twinkling of her sharp black eyes that she had come to find another husband. She said she had been made a widow when she was in the heyday of her youth, 50 years ago. She has four children living, and she is going up to Plainfield to live with her baby, the lass of 60, who went over to Ireland to bring her here.

"She is probably as old as she says she is," said Detective Groden. "She doesn't understand a word of English, like many of the other old folks of County Kerry. Her Gaelic is not classical. It is what the Irish call 'crubbed'—more of a dialect of Gaelic than the pure language."

Mrs. Coffey does not look older than many women of 80. Her hands are wrinkled and somewhat bony, but she knows how to use them in knitting. Her eyesight, she says, is as clear as it was when she was a young woman. She does not walk well without an arm to lean on. She saw a part of the big buildings of the city on her way up to the New Haven boat seated on her trunk in an express wagon.—New York Sun.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

From one ...is laughable, from an... ...ging, for it is the de... the organizing faculty ...which does most to make a people great. In addition to the many political leagues they had the Sons of Reuben, Wrestling Jacobs, United Brethren of Friendship and burial societies beyond counting. Almost every colored laborer is now a member of one of the latter, contributing a few cents each week as an insurance in his own case, for they have a healthful horror of a pauper burial and a delight in what they call a "fittin funeral."

In Pensacola, says the agent representing that place, they have a society for every important function of social life, a union for almost every kind of work, lodges and chapters for all the charities and many religious and educational clubs. At one time the colored roustabouts there had the wharf and transshipment work entirely in their own hands and made their labor worth $3 or $4 per day to each during the busy season. The lowest unit of organization was the squad, the number of men who could conveniently work one vessel under one boss. The bosses were organized in divisions, and at the head of all was a committee to regulate hours and wages. Each laborer had his ticket to show his squad and division, and it was only as a substitute for a member that an outsider could get work at all. The strength of this organization was partially broken at one time, but I am told that colored laborers are everywhere struggling to combine.

At this point I digress long enough to give a whack to that erroneous idea so common in the north that the south and the colored people made no general industrial progress before the war. It is among the most easily proved facts that in 1850-60 the progress of the south, on the whole, was as rapid as it ever has been since and in some things much more rapid, and that the surplus labor and capital were turning away from agriculture. The south is to blame for the false impression created by the gush over the "new south," for, so far as human wisdom can see, the movement of 1850-60, maintained without the check of war, would have put this section far ahead of where it now is.

The increase of cotton production in that decade was 110 per cent, which simply couldn't have continued, as it would have brought a crop of 9,000,000 bales in 1870, and that would have crushed the market nine times as badly as it did last year. In "Uncle Tom's Cabin" St. Clair is made to propound this conundrum: Suppose something should happen to bring down the price of cotton at once and forever, to make it a drug in the market, what a flood of light we should get on slavery, etc. Well, that is precisely what would have happened had there been no war. The glut would have come as early as 1870-4, instead of 1890-4, cotton would have sold at 4 or 5 cents a pound at the gin, and slaves wouldn't have been worth 50 cents apiece for cotton raising.

In 1850 the south had 2,335 miles of railroad, and in 1860, 9,897 miles, an increase of 319 per cent. In 1860 the south produced nearly half the corn of the country, 40 per cent of the live stock, three-fourths of the tobacco and nearly half of several other staples, though it had little more than a third of the population. The gain in sawed and planed lumber was 95 per cent, in iron production 85 and in the manufacture of boilers and engines over 200 per cent. But it is needless to detail. To prove the case it is only necessary to consider this question. If the south had no great manufactures, how did she sustain herself in a four years' war and all outside shut off by a cast iron blockade? These young southern writers are full of hope and energy and enthusiasm, but they must not forget that there are still a few of us old fellows who were alive before the war and saw what was going on. Horace Greeley, in the first chapter of his "American Conflict," showed that the United States in 1860 was the greatest and most prosperous nation on the globe, and James G. Blaine says the extraordinary prosperity of the south at that time created an excess of confidence which had much to do with bringing on the war.

But the young south is active and vigorous, with an eye for the main chance and a talent for advertising, and this exposition is a splendid monument to its fervent local pride.

Balloons Are Hard to Hit.

Experiments have been made in Austria in order to test the likelihood of a balloon being hit when fired at. A captive balloon, at an altitude of about 4,265 feet, was fired at from a distance of 4,400 yards and was struck nine times without being brought down. In a second trial a captive balloon was fired at from 5,500 yards' distance. A violent wind, causing the balloon to plunge a good deal, rendered the aim very difficult, and the balloon was not brought down until the fifty-sixth round.

WILLIAMS THE STANDARD BEARER.

Career of the Massachusetts Man Who Opposes Greenhalge For Governor.

George Fred Williams, who aspires to emulate the example of William E. Russell and carry Massachusetts for the Democracy in a gubernatorial fight, was a Republican until 1884, when he broke away from his party during the Cleveland-Blaine campaign and allied himself with the followers of Cleveland. He thus became known as the leading "Mugwump" of Massachusetts, and he has even been designated the "original Mugwump." He was born in Dedham, Mass., 43 years ago, but looks much younger than he really is. His education began at the Dedham high school, from which he received his diploma in 1868. He then attended Dartmouth college and was graduated from that institution in 1872. Not content with his store of knowledge, he went abroad, where he studied for a time in the universities of Heidelberg and Berlin. Upon his return to America he read law, was admitted to the bar in 1875 and has since built up a large and lucrative practice in Boston.

GEORGE F. WILLIAMS.

In 1878 he produced a lawbook, "Williams' Citations on Massachusetts Cases," that has since been considered an authority on the subject. Between the years 1880 and 1887 he also edited eight volumes of the "Annual Digest of the United States."

In 1889 Dedham sent him to the state legislature, where he distinguished himself during the west end investigation and as a member of the committees on probate, insolvency and election laws. In 1890, when William E. Russell carried the state for the Democracy and defeated J. Q. A. Brackett for governor by over 9,000 votes, Williams was elected to congress in the Ninth Massachusetts district. While in congress he refused to abide by the decision of the Democratic caucus nominating Crisp for speaker and voted for Mills in the house. His Republican opponent in the present campaign is Frederick T. Greenhalge, who has been twice elected governor of the commonwealth.

"LITTLE CHARLEY" CULBERSON.

The Plucky Governor Who Knocked Out Corbett and Fitzsimmons In Texas.

Charles A. Culberson, who recently knocked out Corbett and Fitzsimmons in a single legislative round, was elected governor of Texas about a year ago, and is a son of David B. Culberson, the famous Lone Star State congressman, who has served a score of years in the national house of representatives. His determined son was born in Dadeville, Ala., about 40 years ago, but has resided in Texas nearly all his life. As a boy he received an excellent high school education, and then entered the Virginia Military institute, Lexington, Va., from which he was graduated in 1874.

His father was then a lawyer of note in Texas, and the son chose the same profession. He received his legal education in the office of his father, and also took the regulation course in the law department of the University of Virginia, from which institution he was graduated with honors. In 1877 he was admitted to practice at the bar of Texas, and began his legal career in Jefferson.

GOVERNOR CHARLES A. CULBERSON.

In 1880 he entered the whirl of politics, and was elected to his first office, that of county attorney of Madison county. He was even then looked upon as one of the coming men of the younger school of Texas Democrats, and was soon nominated and elected attorney general of the state. His firmness of character and unquestioned legal ability led to his re election, and in 1894 he was considered strong enough to successfully aspire to the gubernatorial nomination. He was opposed by the venerable ex-United States Senator John H. Reagan and other powerful Texas Democrats, but was nominated and elected.

His friends affectionately refer to him as "Little Charley," but considerable imagination is necessary if the sobriquet is to be accepted as descriptive. The governor is about 5 feet 10 inches tall and is broad shouldered and deep chested. He is very fond of athletic sports—is an athlete himself, in fact—and weighs about 170 pounds. In the picturesque language of a Texan admirer, the governor "has plenty of courage, could give a bulldog cards and spades for clean grit and is about as swift a politician as Texas has afforded since the days of Sam Houston."

OLD SCHOOL AND NEW

DR. J. L. WORTMAN, PALEONTOLOGIST, AND JOHN SWINTON, ROMANTICIST.

How the Discoverer of the Latest "Missing Link" and the Social Reformer Once Discussed the Romance of Science and the Romance of the Emotions.

Dr. J. L. Wortman, paleontologist, who has made such a notable discovery in Wyoming as to seem to warrant him in claiming to have found the bones of the true "missing link" in the chain of evolution from the monkey to the man, is below middle age. That he has succeeded in winning an exceptionally high place in the ranks of scientific discoverers while yet comparatively young is matter for sincerest felicitations from his friends. It may be set down as a fact, however, that the news of Dr. Wortman's success this year does not come to his friends as a surprise. To them he has often repeated the statement that in his opinion the part of Wyoming near the headwaters of Bitter creek, where the priceless find was made, contains the richest and oldest accessible deposits of fossils that have yet been discovered anywhere.

DR. J. L. WORTMAN.

Originally the bed of a fresh water lake, it was filled in through almost countless ages by sediment brought in by streams tributary thereto. In this sediment the bones of animals that were mired or drowned were frequently preserved almost and sometimes quite intact, only to be revealed to the inquiring eye of the investigating scientist, ages after their interment, by the washing away of the silt. When it is explained that layers of preserved remains almost a mile thick are now exposed to sight in the bed of this old lake, the cause for Dr. Wortman's enthusiastic researches there can be readily understood. Concerning the nature of the current discovery so much has appeared in the dispatches and elsewhere that it is necessary here to say nothing further save that the bones are undoubtedly those of a monkey, and that the indications are that in life it was at a stage of evolution which would practically confirm the truth of the so called Darwinian theory. Scientists will look for Dr. Wortman's detailed and technical account of this discovery and what it means with great impatience, and it is to be hoped that the doctor can be induced also to give to the world a popular version thereof.

Unlike most profoundly scientific men, this discoverer is peculiarly happy in couching the most difficult scientific truths in words that may be understood by every one. So thorough are both his scientific knowledge and his mastery of clear, simple and strong English that he is able to impart all the charm of romance to what told by the pen or the tongue of many another would be but the dullest recital. Dr. Wortman believes in the romance of science, believes it to be far more interesting than the romance of sentiment, and hails with delight every opportunity that presents itself for pitting the stories of investigation against those of the emotions. Perhaps he has never appeared to better advantage than he did one evening last spring at a dinner given by the Sign o' the Lantern, a New York club of which the professor is a popular member, to John Swinton, journalist, romanticist and social reformer. It should be said, to the credit of Mr. Swinton, however, that he held his own well.

It was contended by Mr. Swinton that in these utilitarian, scientific days there is little or no romance; that while, as to mere comfort, mankind may be better off than formerly, he is no longer picturesque or personally independent in a degree even faintly approaching the picturesque independence of the past, and that the tendency of present conditions cannot fail to be in the direction of great and lasting deterioration of the race. Mr. Swinton did not pour forth these views in any such commonplace and conventional phrases as those which I have perforce employed. He clothed his ideas in the crystalline forms of nervous and idiomatic English, of which he is so great a master, and when he sat down it seemed that no one would or well could disagree with him.

But this notion was a mistaken one. Scarcely had the speaker seated himself when Dr. Wortman arose and began a plea for the recognition of the romance of science and the value of scientific research. Possibly his words may not have been so gracefully arranged as Mr. Swinton's, but they were vigorous, enthusiastic and compelling. In support of what he had to say the doctor told of the discoveries that had been made by himself and others in the very locality whence the bones of the so called "missing link" were taken last summer. His stories were not recited in the spirit of one who would glorify himself, but were chosen from his own experience, obviously because he knew them better than any others. He told of the proofs of the evolution of the horse from a three toed creature the size of a shepherd dog that have been found there and generally accepted by scientists, and of many other discoveries almost as great, and he held his listeners spellbound.

MISS CONSUELO VANDERBILT.

The Prospective Duchess Has Been Carefully Reared and Is Simple In Her Tastes.

Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, who is soon to wed the young Duke of Marlborough, is a very accomplished young woman and has received the best education that thoughtful care and unlimited means can provide. She has made good use of her opportunities and is well fitted in every way to assume the high social position in England the duke's rank will give her. She is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, who agreed to disagree in the divorce courts not long ago, and, strange to relate, the future duchess is the goddaughter of a duchess—the Duchess of Manchester—who was formerly Miss Consuela Yznaga.

At the age of 6 little Miss Vanderbilt, heir to about $30,000,000, was placed in the care of a very capable governess, who taught her to read and write, and who has since been her principal teacher. French and German tutors made her conversant with these languages, and a French maid and a German maid constantly at hand gave her the necessary practice in speaking. She has no particular talent for music or art, but plays well, sketches with some skill and is a graceful dancer. She has been hedged about by so many precautions that she has not had the experience of most American girls of her age, and the Duke of Marlborough is the only young man who has been permitted to pay her any attention. She has never been permitted to walk or drive alone with any young man except the duke, and she is rather inclined to be shy and retiring in her manner.

As she is only 17 she will be the most youthful duchess in all England, and in the matter of social precedence she will be far ahead of all American women on the other side. She has black hair and brown eyes, and is about 5 feet 6 inches tall. She has an olive complexion and rosy cheeks, and a No. 3 AA shoe is said to be an excellent fit for her dainty foot. She cherishes no special fad, plays tennis with skill and rides a bicycle, and her favorite color is pink. She can talk intelligently on the literature of the past and present, and keeps well informed on the topics of the day. Her gowns are always the best that money can buy, but they are very simple and in good taste. She never wears jewelry at entertainments, and her only ornament at the great ball at Marble House, Newport, recently was a handful of pink carnations fastened in her black hair.

CONSUELO VANDERBILT.

A Woman In Africa.

The niece of the late Canon Kingsley is an adventurous young scientist. She is a student of botany and zoology, and she has penetrated into regions where Europeans have never before ventured in order to prosecute the studies at first hand. In 1893 Miss Kingsley went out to St. Paul de Loanda for the purpose of studying botany and zoology. After collecting many specimens, she visited Cabenda. Miss Kingsley had to travel through dense bush and swamps, but with such success that she decided to make a second visit to the coast.

She started in December last year in Captain Murray's steamer Batanga, and is still in Africa. Miss Kingsley's latest travels have been in the elephant and gorilla countries.

Expenses of Traveling Salesmen.

The traveling expenses of the commercial salesmen of the country foot up over $300,000,000 a year, and their total salaries and commissions probably amount to about $450,000,000. But these great sums, making together $750,000,000, would not begin to pay for the cost and loss of time that would result were we to return to the old system of letting the customers do the traveling and visit the wholesalers in person. A good deal of pleasure, however, has been lost out of life by the change of methods. The retailer used to enjoy his occasional trips to the great cities to buy goods, while his daily life on the road is a bore to the drummer.

AN ENGLISH FINANCIER.

Career of George Sandeman, Governor of the Bank of England.

More to be envied than the man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo is Albert George Sandeman, governor of the Bank of England, the most important financial institution in the world. Sandeman is 62 years of age, is a native of London, and has been engaged in active business for 46 years. He is the eldest son of George Clas Sandeman, a merchant who had valuable interests in England, Portugal and Australia, and whom he succeeded as the head of the firm of George C. Sandeman, Sons & Co. At the age of 16 he was already a business man of ability, and at 20 he was sent to Portugal to manage a branch house his father had established there. He was successful from the start, and has since become very wealthy and influential. Sandeman is extremely versatile in his pursuits, and has not confined his efforts to any one business. For many years he was chairman of the London Dock company, he has directed a successful assurance corporation, and has been interested in numerous other enterprises.

ALBERT G. SANDEMAN.

His connection with the Bank of England began in 1866, when he was elected a director of the institution. He is the hundredth governor of the bank and ranks as one of England's most eminent living financiers. His wife is the eldest daughter of the late Vicomte da Torre de Moucorvo, for many years Portuguese minister to the court of St. James.

BACKED BY THE BANKERS.

A New Woman Who Is a Nominee For County Treasurer.

There is a general impression that the powerful politician usually gets the plum, but in the Centennial State this does not always happen. Miss Florence McCune is not a member of any political club in Colorado, and she has never taken any part in politics, but for all that the Republican party of Arapahoe county, in which Denver is situated, recently nominated her for the very responsible position of county treasurer. Miss McCune's strength lay in the fact that for 11 years she has served faith fully and ably as assistant county treasurer and has won the respect and esteem of the most cultured men of Denver.

MISS FLORENCE M'CUNE.

Her record proved very valuable to her, for when the convention met David H. Moffat, president of the First National bank of Denver and the richest man in the state, intimated that unless Miss McCune were nominated there would be such a stringency in financial circles that the person who defeated her for the nomination would find difficulty in securing acceptable bondsmen. When this flat went forth, Miss McCune was nominated. She is a native of Hollyville, Ia., and is strong minded enough to admit that she is 33 years of age.

When Miss Florence was 4 years old, she became a resident of Colorado, and when her father died in 1881 the pioneers induced the county treasurer to make Florence his assistant.

THE ONWARD MARCH

of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Do you doubt that hundreds of such cases reported to us as cured by "Golden Medical Discovery" were genuine cases of that dread and fatal disease? You need not take our word for it. They have, in nearly every instance, been so pronounced by the best and most experienced home physicians, who have no interest whatever in misrepresenting them, and who were often strongly prejudiced and advised against a trial of "Golden Medical Discovery," but who have been forced to confess that it surpasses, in curative power over this fatal malady, all other medicines with which they are acquainted. Nasty cod-liver oil and its filthy "emulsions" and mixtures, had been tried in nearly all these cases and had either utterly failed to benefit, or had only seemed to benefit a little for a short time. Extract of malt, whiskey, and various preparations of the hypophosphites had also been faithfully tried in vain.

The photographs of a large number of those cured of consumption, bronchitis, lingering coughs, asthma, chronic nasal catarrh and kindred maladies, have been skillfully reproduced in a book of 160 pages which will be mailed to you, on receipt of address and six cents in stamps. You can then write those cured and learn their experience. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

A PHENOMENAL CHILD.

Instead of Growing Larger It Becomes Perceptibly Smaller.

The physicians at the Postgraduate hospital, New York, have their attention occupied just now by a remarkable baby, and extraordinary exertions have been made to keep this phenomenal child alive. When born, the baby was fully developed; but, strange to say, instead of increasing in weight and size the infant became perceptibly smaller every day.

A very novel method was then tried to preserve life. The infant was wrapped in cotton wool and laid in an incubator, its couch being a tray that is actually one of the balances of a large pair of scales. The lightest increase in weight is thus perceptible in a moment. At the child's head is a thermometer so adjusted as to record its temperature. Other instruments record its pulsations and respirations.

His food, consisting of one part sterilized milk and two parts barley water, is administered every hour, 240 drops being given drop by drop every time—a tedious process, but it would be injudicious to feed him in the ordinary way. When a fortnight old, the child weighed 2½ pounds and was 13 inches long.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery, it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Flocken's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00

Fooled by a Parrot.

A parrot belonging to an opera company, and which figures in one of the acts of the show, escaped from its keeper at the New York Central railroad station at Rochester recently while the members of the company were waiting for a train. As the train pulled into the station, and there was a rush for the gates, the parrot, from the top of the big clock, sang out:

"Hello, you have forgotten something!"

Several people hurried back to their seats to look for satchels or parcels. As the passengers came in from the trainhouse they were greeted with:

"Hello, Harry! Hello, old boy!"

All the members of the company joined in trying to catch the bird, but did not succeed for a long time, during which the parrot kept up its chatter. At least 25 people missed their trains in coming back on Poll's remark that something had been forgotten.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The deadly cartoon is taking a very prominent part in the Ohio campaign this year.

The Columbus Journal thinks that if Senator Brice ever finds out that he is a candidate for re-election there will be trouble.

Up to the hour of going to press the chances for a joint debate between ex-Governor Foraker and Senator Brice were not brightening.

The weather man is doing all he can to make the Ohio campaign a success The politicians could not have more delightful conditions for tearing up the grass.

Senator Brice's railroad, it seems, has failed to comply with the provisions of the safety car coupler bill This neglect may interfere with his desire to make another coupling with the senatorship

Political leaders in cities where the registration of voters is required have much work to do that is not experienced in the smaller cities. Is is not an easy matter always to get all the voters registered and much constant drumming is requiaed to awaken enough interest to insure anything like a full registration.

There are five governors and five ex-governors advertised as being engaged to stump Ohio. The governors are McKinley, Hastings, of Pennsylvania, Matthews, of Indiana, Jackson of Iowa, and McCorkle, of West Virginia. The ex-governors are Foraker Foster and Campbell, Hill, of New York, and Waite, of Colorado.

A New Restriction on Marriage.

A most ridiculous discussion arose the other evening at a cosmopolitan dinner party Conversation flagged slightly and a wicked Yankee launched an apple of discord in the shape of the statement, now well known in London, that a bill was being framed in the house of lords forbidding a man to marry his widow's cousin. A French lady made cutting remarks about the established church of England and its restrictions A French colonel ponderously declared that the depopulation of France would prevent the French government from putting any such limitation on marriage, which was already difficult enough in this fair land. Sundry Americans rejoiced in a Pharisee-like manner over the absolute freedom of our own beloved country, as this was evidently not a case of the prohibited degrees, and finally the discussion bid fair to degenerate into a serious dispute, when the author of this turmoil mildly suggested that as yet no man had after his death taken any interest in any of his widow's female relatives, which put a sudden end to the political theological debate then raging.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Youthful Criminals.

There were a couple of youthful criminals up before Mayor Nichols this morning, and the mayor gave them such a fright that they will not try to go through any more houses. They were two little fellows by the name of Grossglaus, who carry the Mirror and going to the home of Earl Sutton the other night they entered the house and took fifty cents out of Mrs Sutton's pocketbook, while she was in the back yard

Mrs Sutton entered the house while one of the boys was in the kitchen and when she came to pay the girl for milk that evening missed the money. Mr Grossglaus learned of it through the boys and made the money good and the youths were brought before the mayor and given a scare. They claim that there was a third boy with them by the name of Kinsler and that he went up stairs and took the money

A MINER'S ROMANCE.

How Shoemaker Brown Came Into a Fortune.

One of the happiest men who have come to San Francisco for many a year was Shoemaker Brown, a grizzled miner of Forty Mile Camp, Alaska, who arrived on the schooner Prosper a few days ago from the solitudes of the great Yukon

Shoemaker Brown was en route to his old home in Canada, where a windfall of $25,000 awaits him, and where he will soon be reunited with his long absent old family

The old miner had wandered from his home at Toronto many decades ago, though he had every reason to remain He was the proprietor of a prosperous stationery business, but he left, as he states, because of his wife's insufferable temper, which led her to desert the household at frequent intervals So the old stationer packed his trunk one day and left for Forty Mile Camp without telling any one his destination

About a year ago William Ogilvie, a survey or for the Canadian government, met Shoemaker Brown at the Alaska mining camp, and the old miner said, "If you ever go to 128 Sally street, Toronto, you will see my name on the sign, for I was a stationer there for many years."

And when Ogilvie went to Toronto he found the sign, though the name of the street had been changed When he told what he had seen in Alaska to a beautiful young girl in charge, she burst into tears and said, "He is my father long mourned as dead."

It then came to light that one of old Shoemaker's aunts had died a few years ago, leaving him $25,000 The cure pendence that followed led Thomas Brown to abandon the lonely regions of the aurora borealis, where he had been fighting an uphill battle for a livelihood for many years, and rejoin his family in the precincts of Canadian civilization.—San Francisco Chronicle.

HERE'S YOUR CHANCE.

If You Want to Advertise Yourself Broadly, Buy This Jewel.

Here's your chance, ladies and gentlemen of the new richness:

The famous Hope diamond is for sale. Price, £24,000

No one in England can afford to buy it, for the aristocracy is burst wide open, and the Kaffir fellows find diamonds a drug in the market

What a lovely present it would be for Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt! Which one of her family will buy it for her?—Chelly Knickerbocker in New York Recorder

The Hope diamond is an exceedingly rare gem because of its rare color, which is a fine blue, and its high brilliancy. On account of its color it is more precious than diamonds of the purest white water. It is said that the Hope diamond is merely one half of the historic blue diamond which adorned the collar of the Order of the Golden Fleece worn by Louis XV and which was stolen during the revolution The companion half is said to have been disposed of several years ago at the sale of the Duke of Brunswick's collection.

Mr Hope's diamond weighs 40 carats and is perfect in form and cutting. Only two other blue diamonds of considerable size are known One, known as the Blue Star, is of a milky tint, and the other, of purest azure blue, which formerly belonged to Marie Antoinette, is now in the collection of a Parisian amateur.

Signs of a Hard Winter.

STORY'S CLEOPATRA.

A FINE POEM BY THE RECENTLY DECEASED AMERICAN SCULPTOR

He Knew Law, Wrote Poems, Made Masterpieces of Plastic Art—The Inception of the "Libyan Sibyl"—Hawthorne's Note of Story's "Cleopatra."

William Wetmore Story, whose death in Italy has been recently announced, was best known to his countrymen in America as a distinguished sculptor Among his works in sculpture are numerous monuments, ideal figures and groups, colossal statues, portraits and busts.

He was for several years United States commissioner for Massachusetts, Maine, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, and also United States commissioner in bankruptcy He practiced law in Boston until 1850, and also edited and annotated various of his father's works Since then he lived principally in Rome and devoted himself chiefly to sculpture and literature.

In general literature among his prose publications are "Life and Letters of Joseph Story," "Roba di Roma," "The American Question," "Proportions of the Human Figure," "Castle St. Angelo" and "The Evil Eye"

He wrote a "Poem Delivered on the Centennial of the Settlement of Salem" and "Stephanie," a tragedy. His literary works include two volumes of poems and many poems printed, but not collected.

Of his many ideal works the most celebrated are probably the "Cleopatra and the "Libyan Sibyl" Mrs. H. E. Stowe has told the world the story of the conception of this last, how, in the sculptor's studio one day, she had told the story of Sojourner Truth and had described the grand physique, the somber, stately, mysterious look and air, the blending of pathos and unconscious dignity which had ineffaceably stamped themselves upon her memory in the first moments of her meeting with that remarkable woman, who seemed to express in her own personality Ethiopia's wrongs and sorrows and her brooding heart of mystery. The next day Mr. Story told how deep a hold the description had taken upon him. Its final outcome was the sculpture of the "Libyan Sibyl," the beautiful, full lipped prophetess who sits brooding over mystery and wrapped within it as a mantle. The intense, impassioned beauty of his statue of "Cleopatra" has become proverbial, and not less so in the sculptor's verses than in his marble.

Mr. Story's statue of Cleopatra was referred to by Hawthorne in the "Marble Faun" as follows:

"In a word, all Cleopatra—fierce, voluptuous, passionate, tender, wicked, terrible and full of poisonous and rapturous enchantment—was kneaded into what only a week or two before had been a lump of wet clay from the Tiber. Soon apotheosized in an indestructible material, she would be one of the images that men keep forever, finding a heat in them that does not cool down through the centuries."

Here is Mr. Story's poem "Cleopatra:"

CLEOPATRA.

Here, Charmian, take my bracelets;
They [illegible] with a purple stain
My arms [illegible] ring pillows;
They are [illegible] where I have lain.
Open the [illegible] water,
And [illegible] my [illegible] throw,
And let me inhale the odors
That over the garden blow.

I dreamed I was with my Antony,
And in his arms I lay
Ah, me! The vision has vanished,
The music has died away.
The [illegible] and the perfume have perished
As this spiced aroma of myrrh
That wound the blue smoke of its odor
Is now but an ashy hill

Scatter upon me rose leaves—
They cool me after my sleep—
And with sandal odors fan me
Till into my veins they creep.
Reach down the lute and play me
A melancholy tune
To [illegible] with the dream that has vanished
And the slumbering afternoon

There, drowsing in golden sunlight,
Lifters the slow, smooth Nile
Through shadow mapped that cover
The wary crocodile.
The lotus lolls on the water
And opens its heart of gold,
And over its broad bed of pavement
Never a ripple is rolled
The twilight breeze is too lazy
Those feathery palms to wave
And yon little cloud is as motionless
As a stone above a grave.

Ah me! This hollow nature
Oppresses my heart and brain
Oh, for a storm and thunder,
For lightning and cold rain!
Fling down that lute—I hate it!
Take feather fan and sword
And clash them and clash them together
Till this sleeping world is stirred

Hark to my Indian beauty—
My exclusive enemy white,
With roses and lilies and feathers—
That flushes and pants for fight
Look, Eastern, as backward and forward
To his hoop of gold he clings
How he trembles with fear and lifted,
And shrieks as he madly swings!
Oh, cockatoo, shriek for Antony!
Cry, Come my love, come home!"
Shriek, "Antony! Antony! Antony!"
Till he hears you even in Rome

There, leave me and take from my chamber
That stupid little gazelle,
With its bright bird eyes so meaningless
And its silly tinkling bell
Take him—no, you must not [illegible]—
The thing without blood or brain,
Or by the body of Isis,
I'll snap his thin neck in twain.

Leave me to gaze at the landscape
Misty stretching away,
Where the [illegible] evening tremors
Over the mountains quivering play,
Till the fierce splendor of sunset
Pours from the west its fire,
And melted as in a crucible
The [illegible] forms recast,
And the bald [illegible] of the desert
With glowing [illegible]
That [illegible] like precious jewels,
Circle its fruitless round

I will lie and dream of the past time
Form of thought I am
And through the passage of memory
Look on my fancy [illegible]
When a [illegible] and [illegible]
Rubbed with [illegible]
Struggle and rush [illegible]
I swam and [illegible] the track
Of [illegible] and [illegible]
The [illegible]
And [illegible] in a tyrannous freedom,
I knew but the law of my moods.

THE WRONG MAN.

He Wanted to Sell the Ring, but the Other Was On.

He was a middle aged man, and though poorly attired I could see he had such a benign cast of countenance that I took him for the next victim of an opium [illegible] I was passing across Washington square when he beckoned me from the bench he was sitting on

"My dear friend," he began as I stopped before him, "I was sitting here two weeks ago when I saw a [illegible] at my feet. It was [illegible] for two weeks I made [illegible] the [illegible], but [illegible] to claim it. You look like an honest man."

"Yes, sir—pretty honest."

"I wish you'd find me a buyer to do. Here is the ring and it must be worth at least $10."

"I'd sell out if I were you."

"You think that would be the proper thing to do?"

"I do. You found the ring and advertised it. No one has claimed it. It is therefore yours to dispose of."

"I thank you, sir, for your advice," he said as his benignness increased. "I wanted to be strictly honest, you see."

"Of course, and you are entitled to all praise. Yes, I'd sell the ring."

"Perhaps you—you" —

"Oh, no! No; I don't care to invest, but you wait a little while, and some greenie will come along Tell him the same story and offer him the ring for $15 If he don't bite, drop to $12, $10, $25, down to $10 It's a gold washed ring, with seven pretty good rhinestones in it and ought to be worth $10 to wear to a Bowery ball or a clam chowder picnic."

He looked up at me, and that benign and fatherly expression gradually faded away and was replaced by a look of disappointment and vexation By and by as we both looked into vacancy, and I at least was thinking how hard it is to be dishonest in this cold world, he suddenly said.

"Well, why don't you go on?"

"I was waiting to see if you had anything more to say."

"No, sir, I haven't! You look to me like a pickpocket or bunko man, and if you don't light out of here I'll give you away to the copper down there!"

I hit out, but I still feel sorry for the poor man. It was perhaps my duty to buy that ring to put with the half hundred other souvenir swindles I have in a bag at home as evidence of my citizenship in New York.—Detroit Free Press.

The U. S. Gov't Reports show Royal Baking Powder superior to all others.

BRIDGE BONDS SOLD.

The County Commissioners Dispose of $15,000 Worth of Securities.

The county commissioners today sold bridge bonds to the amount of $15,000 to Spitzer & Co., of Boston and Toledo, at a premium on the lot of $250.

The bonds are payable in three years and draw 5 per cent interest.

There were three other bids made and one bidder present to make bids, but the bid of Hayes & Son, of Cleveland, of $350 premium was rejected because it was not accompanied by a $500 certified check and the others were shut out through a mistake in the advertisement, the ad reading that all bids must be in by 10 p. m., today, instead of 10 a. m.

RAILROAD NOTES

It is reported here today that the Big Four will change time Sunday.

H. H. Squires, traveling freight agent of the Big Four, was in the city today.

The sale of the Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking will be made Saturday morning at Bucyrus under direction of the court. No trouble from outsiders is anticipated and the road will doubtless be sold to the bondholders' committee.

Perhaps the morning Big Four train that leaves here at 6:15 a. m. is the fastest train on the line. The Knickerbocker's time between here and Bellefontaine is 57 minutes, while the other train is one hour and two minutes, but with the stops it is the fastest train by a couple of minutes.

In advertising the new Buckeye mileage ticket, T. C. Peck, chief clerk in the C., H. V. and T. general passenger department, has made quite a hit with a leaflet bearing a picture of a farmer boy on the run after a stray cow, and above, with reference to the mileage ticket is the expression, "You can't head it off."

The C., S. and H. has placed bulletin boards along the line that are rather novel. One is headed questions and the other advisory bulletins. The question bulletin is answered by the superintendent, while the advisory boards have mistakes of all employes. They are not personal, but are of such a nature that the identity of the employes can be easily discovered.

In a recent article the Railway Review speaks of tests on the Pennsylvania of the new 90-foot rail as though the Pennsylvania was the only system which had thus far given the rails an exhaustive trial. The statement was doubtless unintentional but the C., H. V. and T. should have the credit of being the first road in Ohio and the foremost of the country in demonstrating their availability.

SWEET SIMPLICITY.

PRETTY DRESSES FOR YOUNG LADIES IN THEIR TEENS

New Raspberry Red Shades A Handsome Walking Frock—Marked Change In Hairdressing—Parting In the Middle A Pert and Cute Fancy.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Oct 14.—In these days of grace young girls have a special place assigned to them, and sweet simplicity is the watchword, and yet they were never so prettily or suitably dressed. The pretty and French shepherd's plaids seem particularly suitable to them, and many of them street and home dresses are made of that neat and always refined goods. The checks in them vary in size from 'invisible' to quite large pattern though the pinhead is rather in request now. Black, blue, garnet, brown and olive are all seen on fawn or gray grounds. The skirts are seldom trimmed at all, but occasionally one will be seen with a row or two of braid, or black velvet ribbon. But when neatly finished the material really shows up better without anything.

FOR GIRLS IN THEIR TEENS

There was one very stylish little suit made for a young schoolgirl. This was of large broken lines, brown upon steel gray. The skirt was simply made and the waist was a pointed yoke. The yoke and belt were of seal brown velvet. To give a bit of color there was a double cape of coachman's drab cloth, with a stole collar of brick red tibet with thick chenille fringe of the same color along the edges. There is much of this brick dust red seen about now. In conjunction it is really beautiful. There are comparatively few crepons now this season, but the Gismonda is one. There are wide irregular stripes with deeply crimped and crinkled effects.

The new raspberry red shades promise to become as popular as the Titian colored hair. This new red divides favor with cerise and a velvety geranium color. The grayish indigo blues are much liked for woolen goods, and all the bright metallic luster of peacock's plumes is reproduced for millinery purposes, and also for some gowns. There was a short taffeta dinner dress for a young girl where the skirt had all the "crimson that shines upon the burnished dove." The waist was a tidy little blouse of striped dove and pink taffeta. There were chameleon ribbons fastened on the shoulder like an epaulet and a straight belt of the same ribbon with a flat bow on the left side. A walking frock next attracted my attention. It was of novelty wool, brocaded with black on a dull green ground. The skirt was gathered all the way around, and the waist was a simple French one, with a quaintly shaped belt of green faille. The sleeves were puffed quite full to the elbow. The tore parts were of faille. I must mention the hat this enterprising young lady bought. The brim was of black velvet and the bell crown of white beaver. Between the brim and crown there was a wreath of pink roses all around and three more set under the brim at the right side. A little tuft of black tips made of this delicious Marie Antoinette confection, as the French call it.

The styles in hairdressing are changing very rapidly, and it will not be long before no lady will wear her hair parted in the middle. There are very few to whom such a style is really becoming. The most of those who wear it so now do it more to show that they do not afraid to wear anything. The new styles are very quaint. One odd idea is to have one side brought down in a plain bandeau and the other side arranged in loose curls. Another fancy is to have the hair combed off the face with a little fringe of curls along the edge. There is a pretty bun coil above this. The hair is massed in little curls. A style for a young girl is to part the hair from front to the nape of the neck, comb it well forward and make a kind of curls about the head of the ends of the hair. One style is to comb the hair all back over a roll and tie a mass of it into a loose knot directly on the back of the head. A pert and cute fancy is to arrange the hair in five little braids and tie each with a smart bow of ribbon. Hairpins are used to weave the locks over or ornamental pins. Two can be used. The rest of the hair is braided and wound the back in a loose braid and tied at the end with a ribbon to match.

OLIVE HARPER.

THE BIVALVE SEASON.

If Properly Cultivated, Oysters Would Be Within the Reach of the Poorest.

[Special Correspondence.]

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—The oyster is not in its prime until October, and epicures wait until they have picked up after the spawning season, before indulging in their daily meal of this favorite shellfish. But, widespread as is the use of oysters as food, it is remarkable how few persons know anything about their culture or cultivation, except that they found on the oyster beds of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard.

It will be much more interesting to tell my readers of some of the curious devices that are used for raising oysters, and it will be news to them that some of the best oysters in the world are really grown upon trees. I do not mean that those trees grow on the land, in woods and forests. They consist of small trees or branches placed in the water upon which the oyster spat attaches itself after it has been fertilized on the surface of the water. In many of the estuaries of the Connecticut rivers—where the bottoms are muddy and unfit for oyster culture—this plan is adopted for collecting spat, and a good many of the young oysters thus collected find their way, as yearlings, to the Pacific coast, where they are sown in the beds of San Francisco bay. And it is not inapropos to explain here that it is very easy to discover whether an oyster has been transplanted or grew where it is found, for oysters have not the power of attaching or fixing themselves a second time.

But to return to the subject of growing oysters upon trees. I shall best explain this economic plan by telling of the great oyster farms of Fusaro and Taranto, in Italy, where, because of the muddy and unwholesome conditions of the bottoms of the lakes, it was necessary to adopt some other method than that of making a bed, as is the case in all the oyster grounds, natural or artificial, in our waters. This Italian plan consists roughly of four corner posts, a web of ropes, branches of trees and various suspended devices for collecting oysters and growing, fattening and storing them. The corner posts are about 20 feet long, and the ropes forming a network between them must be strong enough to support the weight of the collecting devices, etc. The collectors consist of loose bundles of hazel and gorse branches. These are called facines, and when covered with young oysters are broken into twig and tied together in a long string, which, when again suspended in the water, utilize the water volume and give the young oyster full liberty to obtain the best nourishment.

In addition to the facines, or branches, several wire baskets are also suspended from the ropes, and any oysters that be come detached and fall to the bottom, together with the grown oysters on the facines, are placed in these baskets for storage and final growth. This plan has given incredibly excellent results in Italy, and in addition to the tree spat collectors of Connecticut there is no reason why the same method should not be adopted along our coast, where the bottoms are found to be unsuitable.

The popular belief that oysters can only be grown or matured on the sea bottom is here finally refuted. They do not need to be at the bottom to secure their food. As a matter of fact, the amount of food that is actually brought to an oyster colony seems to be in direct proportion to the volume of water passing over it.

In South Carolina there are millions of tons—over 20 miles—of oysters, or more properly, oyster shells. The reason that this is not a greater oyster producing field than either the Chesapeake or Connecticut grounds is simply because of the asphyxiating condition of the inshore bottoms. No trouble has been taken to manufacture the bottom of this naturally prolific oyster region, and as a consequence the young oysters are found in pyramids 10 and 12 feet high or growing on the piles and stakes along shore. Because of their natural instinct—and it cannot be other than instinct that causes them to cling to the world rubs or crowd on top of each other—the Carolina oyster is exposed to the sun and atmosphere for at least eight hours out of the 24 and cannot thrive. Their shells are almost transparent, the meat is long and narrow and for this reason they have received the name of [illegible]. Considering the enormous [illegible] consumption and exportation of New York oysters it seems to me that the great resources of these great oyster beds of South Carolina should be judiciously developed.

In [illegible] of how profitable the oyster is I shall state that the average [illegible] eggs in the female oyster is [illegible]. And Professor Brooks of [illegible] made a calculation that [illegible] matured oysters [illegible] from them [illegible] years there [illegible] oysters and [illegible] the bulk [illegible] So that we must find [illegible] oysters [illegible] take possession [illegible] have this process and [illegible] that [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] Carolina.

ROB F. WATSON.

UNLUCKY TO SAVE FROM DROWNING.

Some Queer Superstitions of People the World Over.

It seems strange that swimmers should be superstitious, yet it is so, not is it alone the small boy who sees his companion sinking into a watery grave without attempting to rescue him, whether he sank because he was not an expert and got beyond his depth, or whether he was seized with cramps. It seems ridiculous to think of, and no doubt it will save many a superstitious person from risking his own neck by being dragged under by the weight and struggles of a drowning person to know it is counted unlucky and worse than madness to try to save the life of a drowning person or to resuscitate him, as sooner or later he is bound to do you some mean turn.

It is another one of those old superstitions handed down from generation to generation from our European ancestors, and of which no one knows the derivation. Traces of it are found among the Sioux and other tribes of the Indians of the west, who seem to have inherited that belief from their forefathers along with so many other quaint things. They still believe, and it's a part of their creed, that in hunting the body of a drowned person you can discover its resting place by floating a chip of cedar wood, which will stop, even in the strongest current, and turn around over the exact spot.

In Great Britain the belief that you must not rescue a drowning person is most prevalent in Cornwall and various parts of Scotland. The French sailor and the boatman of the Danube bow to the decree, together with the Russians, and let the people drown.

Dr. Taylor, in his "Primitive Culture," declares this lingering foulness for this old creed is because the water spirit is angry at being despoiled of its victim, and should the unlucky person who has dared to frustrate him trust himself to the water's power he will drown as surely as fate.

The Bohemian fisherman shrinks from snatching a drowning man from the waters, fearing the water demon will take away his luck in fishing and drown him before he gets to shore with the would be victim. In Germany, when some one is drowned, they say, "The river spirit claims his yearly sacrifice," or, "The Nix has taken him."

The belief is current not alone in those countries above mentioned, but the Kamchatkans, rather than help a man out of the water, would force him under, and if he should escape to the shore no one would dare receive him into his house or dare to give him food. He is supposed to be dead after once falling into the water.

THE SARGASSO SEA.

A Wonderful Region In the Atlantic Which No Man Has Explored.

The surface of the Sargasso sea seems like a perfect meadow of seaweed. It is supposed that this enormous mass of gulf weed may have been partly grown at the bottom of the shallower parts of the sea and partly torn from the shores of Florida and the Bahama islands by the force of the gulf stream. It is then swept around by the same agency into the Sargasso sea, where it lives and propagates, floating freely in midocean. And the store is ever increasing, both by addition and propagation, so that the meadow grows more and more compact, and no doubt at the inner parts extends to a considerable depth below the surface.

Nor is this all, for at least two-thirds of all the infinite flotsam which the gulf stream carries along with it in its course sooner or later finds a resting place in the Sargasso sea. Here may be seen huge trunks of trees torn from the forests of Brazil by the waters of the Amazon and floated down far out to sea until they were caught and swept along by the current; logwood from Honduras, orange trees from Florida canoes and boats from the islands, stave in, broken and bottom upward, wreck and remains of all sorts reaped from the rich harvest of the Atlantic, whole keels or skeletons of ruined ships, so covered with barnacles, shells and weeds that the original outline is entirely lost to view, and here and there a derelict ship, transformed from a floating terror of the deep into a mystery put out of reach of man in a museum of unexplained enigmas.—Chambers' Journal.

Mistress of Style.

An article in a periodical calls attention to the degree of M. S.—Mistress of style—as that most coveted by all women, outranking, at least so far as admiration is concerned, all the A. M.'s and Ph. D.'s in existence. The statement lead back to the old query, Do college girls and other women given to intellectual exercise care for such mundane matters as looks and clothing? It may safely be asserted that they do. There may be no definite, outspoken "views" on the matter, but the principle that a woman [illegible] to make the most of her opportunities is they intellectual or otherwise must both look and dress just as well as she can is universal. Mrs. May Wright Sewall herself wouldn't dream of facing her national council in a last year's bonnet. The day of the blue stocking and the kandrelless deformity is past. Even phil anthropical and college women are now always as conscientious for grace of body as for grace of mind.—Chicago Post.

His Logic.

Sunday School Boy—Isn't there lots of life in ginger, teacher?

Teacher—Yes.

"And bread is supposed to be the staff of life, teacher."

"Yes, yes."

"Well, then, it has occurred to me that perhaps Methuselah lived on gingerbread."—Yonkers Statesman.

It Soothes Him.

After a man has pounded on the door for half an hour it makes him feel less mad to be assured by a wife of his wants to come in.—Los Angeles Express.

"TIME BRINGS ROSES."

When from my mountain top of years I gaze
Backward upon the scenes that I have passed,
How pleasant is the view! And yet how vast
The desert where I trusted many days!
There, where now hangs that blue and shining haze,
And there and there my feet with pain were cast,
Hope soar'd dark, but always at the last
In [illegible] came from unexpected ways.
And now all past grief is as but a dream
Yet even now there loom before my path
Shadows whose gloomy portent checks my breath
But shadows are not always what they seem
God takes from some rose-apples to his wrath,
And his best gift is the white rose of death.

—John H. Boner in Century.

AN APOLOGY.

I was quite a little alarmed when I found myself in the room, but after my behavior on the previous evening it was absolutely necessary that I should see Miss Power. I began bluntly. "I have come," I said, "to offer an apology for—for what happened last night."

She opened her eyes and regarded me with an innocent stare, in which, however, some haughtiness mingled. "I do not understand," said she. "Did you trip on my dress? Well, at any rate, I hate apologies. Will you have some tea?"

"I thank you," said I, seating myself and putting my hat on the floor. "You see, when we came out of the hall and there was that rush, I had no idea—"

"Yes, it was an abominable crush," put in Miss Power hastily. "I wonder, Mr. Radcliff, if you would mind ringing the bell."

"You remember," I explained, as I returned from the bell, "how just as we reached the door"—

"Oh, dear me!" cried Miss Power suddenly. "This teapot is such a silly thing! I hope nothing went over you."

"Not at all," I said politely.

She examined her dress carefully, and I waited in patience. "I think a tea stain is worse than a wine stain, don't you, Mr. Radcliff?" she went on. "And one can't put salt on it either."

"No," I assented cautiously. "But when we were being pressed so hard against the door and trying to get out, you were on my right, and the rush sent me"—

"You do take sugar, don't you?" interposed Miss Power abruptly. "How hot the weather is!"

"One lump, please," said I. "And then some one pushed me, and I suppose some one pushed you, and the next thing I knew was that our cheeks were"—

"Mr. Radcliff," interrupted Miss Power quickly, her cheeks flaming, "I think we had better forget silly things and go on with our tea." She spoke with some dignity and even with an air of rebuke.

"That's what I want to do," I explained eagerly. "But I have had it on my conscience to explain to you. You see, I couldn't help our cheeks touching." "Mr. Radcliff," said Miss Power, rising, "if you will not leave stupid accidents alone"— "No, no," said I quickly. "That is what I wanted to—I owe you an apology. You see, it wasn't that." "Wasn't what?" asked Miss Power after a pause, and as if she did not want to ask it. "It wasn't an accident," I murmured in a shamefaced way. I felt she was looking at me, and I felt, too, that her cheeks were crimson, and then she laughed an uneasy, discordant sort of laugh. "You can make yourself extremely ridiculous," she said suavely. "But please don't invent nonsense like that, and let us both forget a very unpleasant episode." "I suppose it was unpleasant," said I dubiously. "Highly," she said, with asperity, and turning away began to arrange some flowers in a vase.

"But you see," I began in a shuffling manner, "I can't rest—I mean I want you to say you forgive me." "I don't think," observed Miss Power tranquilly, "that there is anything to forgive, seeing that it was entirely accidental." I will confess that her persistence baffled me. I almost began to think it must have been an accident. Still, I persevered. It was my duty. "But it wasn't an accident," I cried dolefully. "Mr. Radcliff, you are intolerable," said she quickly. "You yourself have just explained that it was the crowd, and"— "Yes," I put in eagerly, "that was when our cheeks—when we"— "Yes, yes," she exclaimed impatiently. "But that was not all," I added. Miss Power elevated her eyebrows, but did not face me. "Really," she said indifferently, but I could have sworn that she was flurried. "You don't know what happened, then?" I asked meekly. "We came away, I suppose," said Miss Power, with the assumption of carelessness still upon her. "Yes," I said meaningly, "after something else." "Upon my word, you are very tedious," said she. "I neither understand you nor wish to understand you." I am sure she was agitated. "Were you not aware," I asked, "that I—that I"— Miss Power made no remark, but was much occupied with her flowers—"that I—well—I thought you must have known." Still I got no help, and her back was toward me now. "I took advantage of the juxtaposition to"—I heaved a sigh and got it over—"kiss you!"

Miss Power turned round abruptly, and her eyes were full of honest anger. She surveyed me with great dignity, and then, in very cold tones, said, "You seem determined to use the cap and bells today." "Indeed," I said earnestly, "this time and"— "How dared you?" said Miss Power fiercely. "Now, to say the truth, I did not think she would have made this fuss about it, because I imagined that she had known, and—well, she had been polite enough when I came in. But she was obviously very angry indeed, and this confounded me. I stammered more apologies. "I—you—the temptation." I murmured. "Temptation," she echoed, with scorn. "A man is a poor creature who cannot, who has no self restraint and must insult every girl he runs across, and"— "Oh, but it isn't every girl," I cried hastily. "It was only you. I wouldn't have taken advantage of any one else, and"— "That is a pretty compliment to me," she interrupted, with angry hauteur, "that I should be the one chosen for your insult." I moved my hands in helpless dismay in protest. "Oh, but—you don't understand." I declared. "I understand you quite well enough," she said, looking at me with contempt. "For temptation!" I murmured again in confusion. "You curled her nostrils. "I would not have done it in any other case, because there would not have been the same overpowering temptation." I said bravely. "I dare say not," she exclaimed with a sneer. "You see," I went on breathlessly, "no one could look at you without wanting to—" "I think we have discussed this enough," said Miss Power curtly. It was your eyes that first gave me the irresistible impulse," I continued humbly.

Miss Power snorted, very daintily, of course. "I have never seen eyes that color," I added earnestly. "Eyes are common enough," returned Miss Power severely as she turned away again.

"No," said I boldly, "it is their strange, sweet combination of hazel and brown, and—I don't think this is very interesting, Mr. Radcliff," said she coldly. "Then that peculiar shade of auburn I've never seen in any hair in the world," I cried eagerly. Miss Power shrugged her shoulders. "That is ridiculous," she said. "It's true, I declared. "Those wavering masses—I've often wondered and wondered how it looks when you take it down at night." "I don't think you have any right to do that," remarked Miss Power. "I can't help it," I explained. "And the shape of your face." "There are plenty of people with faces as—much the same as mine," said she, refingering the flowers. "Where are they?" I demanded. "I've knocked about the world a good deal, but I've never come across one within miles of it."

"You're rather extravagant, Mr. Radcliff," said Miss Power. "I often lie awake at night thinking of you," I continued. "I can call up every single detail of your face and expression. And—I know you will think me very foolish and—wrong, but sometimes I—well, I can't go to sleep without pretending to—to do what I did last night, you know." "How foolish you are!" said Miss Power, with a faint laugh. "That was the reason," I explained. "Why, when I found myself, not of my own doing, you know, but just found myself close to you, I couldn't have helped it for the world. I just—well, it seemed all so wonderful and beautiful, and my heart went thump, and I became quite unconscious of the crowd and every one, and then I caught your eyes, and—well, I did it before I knew."

There was a pause, and then, "Oh, but you shouldn't let such things influence you like that," observed Miss Power in a softened voice.

"I am very sorry," said I humbly. "Did you mind very much?"

"Of course," she replied promptly and then hurriedly went on. "That is, I mean, when our cheeks"— She stopped in a rare confusion.

"But you didn't mind my kissing you, then?" I asked innocently.

"Certainly I did," said Miss Power quickly. "That is—I mean—no, I didn't know, you see."

"Of course you didn't," I answered, looking crestfallen.

"I should have minded very much if I had known," said she, as though anxious that there should be no mistake.

"I know you would," said I morosely. "I am a brute."

"Oh, I wouldn't make too much of it, Mr. Radcliff," said she kindly, looking out at the window. "You have apologized, you know. And of course—well, I can understand from what you have said that you had—some excuse, you know."

"Do you forgive me?" I asked moodily.

"Oh, yes," said Miss Power cheerfully. "Of course, and I wouldn't think anything more about it if I were you."

"But I can't help thinking about it," I said desperately.

"But, Mr. Radcliff"— she began and was silent.

"How can you ask me to forget all about it with the memory of that—with that memory?" I asked. I arose, and from where I stood I was conscious that Miss Power's cheek was tinged with color.

"You—you shouldn't have done it then," said she with a tremulous little laugh. I approached her, hat in hand. "I couldn't help it," I said with a sigh.

"Oh, but that's nonsense," said she very gently, regarding the traffic in the street.

"Whenever I am close to you I have the same temptation, I said, drawing near.

"But that's not nice of you," exclaimed Miss Power.

"All the time we have been in this room I have been struggling with a singular desire to do the same thing," I said, "and now it seems to be quite mastering me."

"Oh, you mustn't give way," murmured Miss Power, but she did not move, and I was now very close to her.

"I can't help it," I explained. Apparently Miss Power could not help it either.—H. B. Marriott-Watson in New Budget.

Lowell's Advice to Young Men.

He had enjoyed heartily his own frequent reading of the works of the great authors he wrote about, and he was able to convey some of this enjoyment to his own readers and to explain to them the reasons for his liking. His favorite of all was the mighty Florentine poet, Dante, whom Lowell steadily studied from early life. Indeed the advice he gave to young men seeking culture was to find the great writer with whom they most appreciated and to give themselves to the constant perusal of this great writer, growing up to him slowly and discovering gradually that to understand him and profit would force them sooner or later to learn many of the things best worth learning.—James Russell Lowell, by Brander Matthews, in St. Nicholas.

Northern Colony In Georgia.

Emigrants from the northwest continue to arrive in Americus in small parties, bound for Wilcox county, where 60,000 people from that region will settle this winter on land purchased for the Fitzgerald colony. Ex-Governor Northen is now in Wilcox, where he has options on 50,000 acres of land in addition to that already purchased through him for the colony.

Many of the colonists are Union soldiers. As soon as the quarter is granted the land will be surveyed into lots to suit purchasers, and 12,000 acres will be laid off into town lots. The streets will be wide, and doubtless it will be one of the best laid off towns in the south. The site for the town-ship has not been selected, nor has the name been suggested, but it is thought that one of the most appropriate names that could be given is Northen City. The colonists will begin to arrive in full force about Oct. 1. It is claimed that many of the colonists are worth from $5,000 to $50,000. The company has a capital of $500,000. They will expend $250,000 in buying the lands, and $150,000 in improvements. Sawmills and other industries will be established, schools and churches will be established also. Those who leave home have met with a warm reception from the good people of that section, and a genuine old Georgia welcome awaits those yet to come.—Americus (Ga.) Times-Recorder.

Training a Locomotive.

It may not be generally known that locomotives intended for express trains require as much training, in their way, for fast running as do race horses. The Pennsylvania Railroad company builds its own engines and those built for express trains are known as class P. They are very large and built, with slight variations after the pattern of the big English engine imported into this country several years ago, and which at that time was a curiosity in its way. When one of these big engines is taken out of the shops to be placed on the road, instead of putting it to the work it is intended for at once it is run for two or three weeks on some one of the local branches in order to train it, so to speak, for faster running. By this means all the bearings and journals connected with the running gear become settled to their work, for should anything about the new machine not work harmoniously there is ample time to adjust the defect. Usually the new engine proves troublesome on account of its propensity to make fast time, and at almost every station the train is found to be a little ahead of schedule time and must wait for from ten seconds to a minute.—Philadelphia Record.

Her Choice.

A woman who has traveled largely in Japan mentioned in the course of a lecture the fact that the Japanese language does not contain an impolite word; hence there is no swearing in that happy land. She also stated that osculation was an unknown pleasure. As the audience dispersed, commenting favorably upon different points, an old woman remarked in a voice loud enough to be heard by all, "Well, for my part, I prefer a country where they kiss and cuss!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Rainbow In a Clear Sky.

For the second time within [illegible] months Santa Barbara was recently favored to a rare and beautiful display, each. With a clear sky and dry atmosphere in the valley, a brilliant [illegible] was seen arching over the Santa Ynez range at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Inside the arch at the extreme [illegible] appeared a zone of white which followed the curve of the outer bow to a height of some 20 degrees. On the 1st of August a similar phenomenon attracted wide attention, but on that occasion the second bow was not observed. Scientific men have been trying to account for these extraordinary visions, which, so far as can be learned, have never been witnessed elsewhere.

Although no rain had fallen within five miles of Santa Barbara, it so was that afternoon in the mountains and night settled down with a rainy storm.—San Francisco Call.

THRILLING SCENES OF PAST REVOLUTIONS ON THE ISLAND

Origin of the Long and Bloody Struggle of 1868-1873—Horrible Barbarity of the Native Spaniards—A Race War and a Terrible Vendetta—The Virginius Affair.

(Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association Book rights reserved.)

CUBA has made more than one glorious fight for freedom. Her struggles in 1850-1 and 1868-73 failed, but the people showed by their courage and devotion that they could fight and that they would suffer for the cause—fight like heroes and suffer like martyrs. It is no idle dream that holds sway in the minds of the friends of Cuba, leading them to hope the present revolution will end in the downfall of Spanish oppression. They believe that the cause is noble and the Cubans worthy of their cause. Since 1825 the island has been disturbed by uprisings, and it was about that time that martial law was declared. It was first adopted to quell political disturbances having their origin in Spain. Martial law has been continued since then and grew to be an instrument of the cruelest oppression and extortion. The first great uprising was that headed by Lopez in 1850-1. It met with disaster, and Lopez paid the penalty with death. After that the island was comparatively quiet until 1867, when a new and onerous system of taxation was inaugurated and both Cubans and native Spaniards resisting there began to conspire.

The right of public meetings had long been suppressed, but there existed in defiance of the authorities numerous lodges of Freemasons, holding sessions secretly. The head or supreme lodge was styled the central junta. It was located in Havana. To this body Carlos Emanuel Cespedes and Francisco Aguilera of Bayamo wrote in June, 1868, threatening to inaugurate a revolution on the holiday of St. James, July 25. At the instance of the junta the outbreak was postponed one year by agreement, but events precipitated the movement earlier. In anticipation of war the Cubans began to drill and engage in other forms of activity, which aroused the suspicions of Spain. Orders were sent to Bayamo to arrest Cespedes and Aguilera, but the governor privately warned them, and with 200 followers they seized the village of Yara and proclaimed the republic. Both leaders freed their slaves and sent out a call for the lodge members to rally around the standard. About 2,000 men responded to the call. They marched into camp, armed with every sort of weapon, but full of enthusiasm and shouting "Cuba libre!"

Cespedes led them at once against the garrisoned town of Bayamo, took it and made it his capital.

From that time on the revolution spread like wildfire. The capital of the central department, Puerto Principe, sent to Bayamo, in driblets, hundreds of young men of the wealthy families who had traveled abroad and imbibed the principles of political and personal freedom and chafed under the yoke of Spain. They were, moreover, trained in all manner of athletic exercises, could ride like cowboys, shoot with the best and handle the sword like the agile Turk, whose native weapon it is. These, the flower of the youth, breathed and preached revolution, but their actions spoke loudest of all.

The voices of caution were unheeded, and the wildest enthusiasm took hold of the people. The Puerto Principeans seized a line of railroad, with all its locomotives, garrisons deserted their posts or threw down their arms at the first fire of the insurgents, and within 60 days from the time Cespedes unfurled his banner one-half the island, with several small cities, was in possession of the revolutionists. There were at the time only 10,000 Spanish troops in Cuba, but the number of able-bodied Spaniards on the island loyal to the mother country numbered 200,000. Captain General Lersundi immediately organized the loyalists to fight the Cuban insurgents. It would have done no good to appeal to Spain. She was struggling under a fierce civil war with no troops to spare. This master stroke of Lersundi started the fires of civil war in the island, not based on politics, as in Spain, but upon racial characteristics. The Cubans were the patricians, the Spanish volunteers men of humble origin. Class hatred was intense and the enlistment of volunteers actually drove into the insurgent ranks large numbers of influential creoles, who, while desiring reforms, were willing to take them at the hands of Spain. In order still further to inhibit the feelings of the populace the Cuban party in Havana started a series of theatrical representations in which Spain and her flag were insulted by words in the mouths of the performers. One night in January a number of volunteers with arms in their hands, secreted themselves about the building and at a signal from the interior when the hated words were being spoken, rushed in and opened fire upon the helpless and unsuspecting Cubans in the audience. A scene of fiendish slaughter ensued in spite of the efforts of Spanish officers, who sat in silence during the performance. Volunteers outside caught the infection and shot down citizens in the street. It seemed for a time that a general massacre of natives had been decided upon and there occurred a general emigration of wealthy Cubans to the United States. Strange to say, actual warfare in the field was stayed by the occurrence for a time. The captain general wished to treat for terms offering reforms. Cespedes, however, was defiant and refused to treat with any one except a specially empowered agent of the home government.

All this embittered the Spanish populace, and a reign of terror lasted for weeks. So savage was the spirit engendered that Cubans were butchered in the street for refusing to cry "Viva Espana!" and women were maltreated when they were caught wearing Cuban colors or letting their hair hang down "a la Cespedes." About this time the battle opened. The Spaniards volunteered for the field with the same readiness they had displayed in mustering for the defense of towns. A column set out under the captain general to attack Cespedes in his stronghold at Nuevitas. The natives harassed the march with such vigor that the Spaniards turned off toward Bayamo, still a prominent Cuban post, but Cespedes caused it to be abandoned and burned. Thus the first campaign was a failure.

The spring of 1869 opened with a regular organized Cuban government—Cespedes at the head—and a house of representatives. Slavery was declared at an end, camps were established all over the island, and the people lived as though the revolution had been accomplished. On the other hand, Spain sent out her best fighting general, Roda, and 30,000 troops followed him across the sea. Meanwhile the ex-Confederate General Thomas Jordan, a West Pointer, had landed with men and arms to aid the insurgents. Everything looked bright for the cause. Cubans abandoned the Spanish towns and gathered in the interior to work for one great end, the freedom of Cuba. The men drilled and manufactured weapons, the women devoted themselves with Spartan courage to every species of work helpful to their fighting compatriots.

Jordan defeated the Spaniards in battle in January, 1870, and was appointed general in chief. About that time the United States offered to mediate, and the force of the revolution gradually weakened. Jordan resigned because he could not get arms and ammunition for active warfare. From time to time small bands of patriots landed from outside, yet the aggregate was a trifle as compared with the armies sent out from Spain to aid the volunteers, 50,000 in five years. During that time 13,000 Cubans were killed in battle and 45,000 prisoners of war cruelly butchered.

On Sunday, Nov. 9, 1873, the American people were horrified to learn that the steamer Virginius had been captured on the way to Cuba and four distinguished leaders taken on board of her summarily executed at Santiago. One of the four was General Washington Ryan, a well known figure in New York city. The steamer had fitted out in the United States secretly and left Kingston, Jamaica, Oct. 23, with a large party on board. Ryan was among them as chief of the expedition. Bembeta, Pedro Cespedes and Jesus del Sal died with him. All marched to the scene of execution, the slaughter house wall, with firm step. Ryan showed dauntless courage, not flinching for a moment and dying without fear or regret. Three days later, Nov. 7, Captain Joseph Fry of the Virginius, 36 of the crew and 12 Cuban volunteers taken on board were executed at the slaughter house wall, Santiago. Captain Fry was an ex-officer of the United States navy and had served valiantly in the Confederate army. Out of 109 men in the Virginius party only 18 escaped punishment. About 122 were killed. Many were young Cubans of great worth and promise and the massacre sent a thrill of horror over the civilized world. As the cause of Cuba rested at that time upon hopes of outside aid in men, arms and money, the disaster to the Virginius proved a fatal blow to the revolution. The war continued for months as a terrible, bloody vendetta. The Spaniards deliberately shot every man found in the country whether armed or not. When asked to conduct the war on civilized principles and exchange prisoners, the Spanish general said: "I will settle our account with bullets. Kill all you have (prisoners). Our men will surrender with much greater reluctance and we can afford to lose those who do."

Whist Combinations.

Proctor calculated that there are no less than 635,013,559,600 ways of dealing whist hands, and that there is only one chance in 158,753,389,900 of holding 13 trumps, and that of course, the dealer's trump must even then be taken and counted. Further, he has proved that out of 1,587,533,899 hands dealt 342,132,219 hands will contain four cards of two suits, three cards of one suit and two cards of one suit. There are 95,534,079,672 ways of making a hand that will contain one five card suit, two three card suits and one two card suit; also that there are 82,000,000,000 ways of dealing a hand so that it will contain five cards of one suit, four cards of another, three of a third and two of a fourth. Fourth in order of frequency comes the hand containing one five card suit, one four card suit and two two cards suit. It is also shown that there are 67,182,636,000 ways of dealing the above hand. "Fifth in order of frequency," says the great mathematician, "comes the hand which many suppose to be most frequent—that which has a great uniformity of distribution, such as one four card suit and three three card suits." Then he goes to work to prove that there are no less than 60,965,856,150 ways of making such hands. Mr. Proctor also discusses the "Yarborough hand," which was so called because Lord Yarborough was always willing to wager £1,000 to £1 that it could not be dealt. Such a hand consists of no card higher than a 9 spot.

UNITED WORKMEN.

Supreme Master Workman of the Order. Chips From the Workshops.

Bro. Joseph E. Riggs, supreme master workman of the A. O. U. W., was born at Portsmouth, O., 58 years ago. He fought in the civil war in the Second Ohio Volunteer infantry and on leaving the service settled at Lawrence, Kan., where he now resides and is a prominent member of the bar. Mr. Riggs became a member of the order in 1881, and in 1882 appeared on the floor of the grand lodge, where for four years he served on its law committee, two years as chairman. Bro. Riggs was elected grand master workman of Kansas in 1888, represented his jurisdiction for the four succeeding years in the supreme lodge, was elected supreme overseer in 1893 and supreme foreman in 1894 and at the last session of the supreme lodge was honored with a unanimous vote for the highest office in the order.

Equality lodge of St. Louis pays the per capita tax and relief call out of its general fund.

Members in good standing July 1, 1895, 843,424.

The new ritual was ready to be sent out the 1st of September.

Pennsylvania has four Degree of Honor lodges.

The supreme master workman was authorized to set apart from the jurisdiction of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Indian Territory as a separate jurisdiction on or after Jan. 1, provided it has a membership of 2,000 members in good standing.

The supreme lodge voted solidly against biennial or triennial meetings of that body.

ODD FELLOWS.

The First Daughter to Become a Rebekah. Notes of the Rebekahs.

It is said the first daughter of an Odd Fellow to become a member of a Rebekah lodge was Miss Oda Underhill of Rochester. When the degree was first established it only allowed Odd Fellows and their wives to become members, but in September, 1879, the sovereign grand lodge amended the law so as to admit daughters, and within three hours after the passage of the amendment, which fact had been telegraphed to Rochester, Miss Underhill was proposed, elected and initiated into Grace Rebekah lodge. On the same evening she was elected secretary and served in that office seven years.—Popular Odd Fellow.

Be ever mindful of your duties as a Rebekah, yield a cheerful obedience to the laws and do your part in forging ahead the best interests of the Rebekah lodges.

In Minnesota there are 117 Rebekah lodges, with 2,659 brothers, making a total membership of 5,520.

There seems to be quite a demand for a sign by which all the Rebekah members may be able to tell an Odd Fellow.

Grand Sire Stebbins has decided that a lady member never having held office, can legally deliver the past grand's charge at the institution of a Rebekah lodge.

Rebekahs seem to be right in it this year, so many grand lodges having given them the right to run their own affairs entirely, and that is right too.

Rebekah lodges have been instituted at South McAlester and Checotah, I. T., and others are talked of at Clarence and Waggoner.

If the Rebekahs add 50,000 new recruits annually for the next decade, and they will, they will get the recognition they deserve, provided the kickers all die off.

Sister Mary E. Donoho, secretary of the Rebekah assembly of California, in her annual report, shows 199 lodges, with a membership of 13,817, with 17 new lodges during the preceding year.

The Colorado Rebekahs take pride in having two of the most youthful noble grands among their sisters in the land, in the persons of Henrietta Orcilia Robinson, born Jan. 2, 1875, noble grand of Social Rebekah lodge, and Clara Twining, born Aug. 10, 1874, noble grand of Maria Rebekah lodge, No. 26.

Hereafter the charter fee for Rebekah lodges in Massachusetts will be $25, not to include rituals. The expense of instituting Rebekah lodges is to be paid from the Rebekah lodge fund.

AMERICAN LEGION OF HONOR.

Standing of the Order In Pennsylvania. From Various Lodges.

The report of Grand Secretary C. H. B. Roberts of Pennsylvania shows a membership of 5,360 and the following financial statement: Receipts of $14,042.87, disbursements, $15,007; assets, $2,466.24; liabilities, none. During the year ending June 30, 1895, sick benefits were paid to 540, amounting to $21,394. The total number of deaths was 182. The contributions to the benefit fund from June 30, 1893, to June 30, 1895, were $862,149, and the amount received from said fund in payment of claims was $601,800, an excess of payments over receipts of $60,349. The amount paid into the benefit fund on account of claims paid was $125,689.

The order has a total membership of 63,000.

Reports from Louisiana show a healthy and growing condition of the legion.

Bro. J. J. Sleeper is now grand commander of New Jersey and Bro. Charles E. Tolhurst grand secretary.

Knights of the Golden Eagle.

The new headquarters of the order in Philadelphia are about ready for occupancy. The property is well adapted for the purposes intended. The building contains 39 rooms and consists of 26 apartments, including offices for the supreme castle, grand castle, grand temple, grand chief and committees, rooms for the Knights of the Golden Eagle association and janitor, armory for the commanderies and military branch officials and four magnificent castle rooms.

MASONIC.

Thirty-four Years Between Making and Raising—Trestleboard Designs.

In 1861 G. W. Sovereign of Oroville, Cal., was initiated as a Mason. On account of his wife's opposition he forbore to advance. Many years passed and his wife died. Lately he read something that caused him to apply to his lodge for advancement, and July 2, 1895, he went to Cherokee and was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. Thus there was an interval of 34 years between his Masonic making and raising.

Sir Walter Scott was a Freemason, and was initiated in St. David's lodge, No. 36, at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1801. This lodge is still in existence and its records show the fact stated above.

Be proud of having held office in your lodge, but don't be too arrogant because you once occupied the oriental chair. Please remember that "there are others."

The grand chapter of Quebec is composed of 11 chapters, with a membership of 472. Royal Arch Masons.

The sixth annual picnic for the benefit of the Illinois Masonic home netted about $5,000.

Bro. Dr. Chetwode Crawley, Masonic historian and senior grand deacon in Ireland, also is an expert and approved worker in the grand lodge of instruction. His Cementaria Hibernica is pronounced "a veritable boon" by Bro. William James Hughan of England.

Almost unanimously the Masonic papers and magazines oppose all use of keys and ciphers. Their use is un-Masonic.

The Masonic Veteran association of the United States of America held a triennial convocation in Boston, Aug. 28. Only members of state or territorial associations are active members.

The United Grand Orient of Lusitania at Lisbon was organized Oct. 30, 1869. It comprised 70 constituent lodges and 2,850 brethren.

Bro. Albert Pike was of the opinion that there is nothing in the world that has the power to create between men living in different countries, speaking different languages and never seeing the faces nor hearing the voices of each other an affection so warm and constant as that of Mason for Mason.

Freemasonry is in a flourishing condition in India. Under the grand lodge of England there are 43 lodges in Bengal, 42 in Bombay, 8 in Burma and 22 in Madras. Under the grand lodge of Scotland there are also 33 lodges, making a total of 151 lodges.

ROYAL ARCANUM.

Tennessee Makes an Excellent Showing. Council Gossip.

Tennessee is proud of the position taken in the supreme secretary's exhibit of new members for June, standing No. 3 in the list of 21 grand councils with 173, and being led only by New York state and Pennsylvania, the former with 460 and the latter only 175, while New Jersey has but 149, Illinois 111 and Massachusetts 101. This makes a gain of 286 in the three months to July 1. The losses in June were four deaths, seven suspensions and withdrawals, a small per cent of loss.

The degree fee for Loyal A. B. association is $3, which will be raised to $5 after the list of charter members is closed, hence the advantage of being enrolled as charter member. The benefit certificate costs but $1 and the medical examination $2.50, total, $6.50, with usual advance assessment.

Past Grand Regent Tigar of Indiana said during his term: "There cannot be too much advertising the order. I believe it accomplishes a good purpose."

Ah, how would the universal exercise of virtue, mercy and charity make this world blossom as the garden of Eden!

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Advantages of Membership In the Knights. Helmet Glints.

A past chancellor of West Virginia upon being asked as to the advantages of the order said: "It offers pecuniary advantages in the form of sick and funeral benefits besides benefits that are intellectual, social and moral. This should be clearly understood by all who would be members of our order. Besides its pecuniary benefits the objects of our order are all to promote brotherly love, relief and truth."

The Knights of Pythias of Illinois will erect a permanent and handsome cottage upon the Illinois state fair grounds. It will be elegant and complete in appointments. It is to be owned by the lodges of Illinois, and the lodge making the largest subscription in proportion to membership toward building it will have the privilege of naming it.

Miss Hattie Hill, daughter of the founder of the Rathbone Sisters, is grand protector of the grand temple of Indiana.

New York has a society of Pythian veterans. It is necessary to have been 12 years in constant membership in the order to be eligible to the veterans.

Red Men.

The great council of California, in session at Redwood City, elected the following great chiefs: Great sachem, A. Jackson; great senior sagamore, Josiah Simms; great junior sagamore, F. A. Whipple; great chief of records, C. F. Burgman; great keeper of wampum, W. J. Smith.

New York gained 925 members the past year.

The salary of the great chief of records of California has been increased from $600 to $1,200 a year.

There are 59 councils and 3,365 members of the degree of Pocahontas in New York.

California gained 244 Red Men and 104 members of the degree of Pocahontas the past year.

American League.

A new secret order is soon to be established to cover the United States and to be known as the American league. Hamilton O., will be headquarters, and the chief of the order will be known as the supreme commander. The heads of the order in the different states will be known as grand commanders. The league will be an intended patriotic order embracing the objects of all the various patriotic orders.

JUST IN TIME.

Nurse Ethel had been with old Mrs. Pardoe for over six months, and the exacting old lady was a bad patient. When Dr. Richard Westwood went to University hospital, he had requested that if possible Nurse Ethel should be sent, she being a distant relative of the patient.

When first she arrived her duties had been light, and she had enjoyed revisiting friends she had not seen since she went to London to learn her profession.

In this way she had met Philip Somers, who about a month after her attendance on the old lady had begun to pay her most marked attention.

But Ethel was not attracted by his dark face and was glad that her increasing duties rendered their meetings few and far between.

The daily visit of Dr. Westwood to which she found she looked forward with a strange delight, was over. The doctor was just turning to leave, when a different look of solicitude came over his face.

"You are worn and pale, nurse. Have you been taking care of your own health lately?"

"Oh, yes."

"Have you taken your daily exercise regularly? You know the end is not far off now and probably you have a hard and anxious week before you. I insist on your going out into the fresh air, Ethel."

The calm professional air was now slipping from him.

The door was opened. Dr. Westwood dropped her hand, and the lovers sprang apart.

"Mrs. Pardoe says will you come to her at once, nurse?" An hour passed before nurse could leave her patient. She sank into one of the seats in the public park and was enjoying the soft spring air, when Philip Somers, raising his hat, came and sat down beside her.

After a few commonplace remarks he mentioned the name of Richard Westwood.

"A good doctor he may be," said he, "but a worthless, scheming fellow for all that."

"How dare you say such a thing? What grounds have you for your cowardly assertion?" she exclaimed.

"I think it only right you should know," he said, feeling that now was his opportunity, "that Dr. Westwood is aware that Mrs. Pardoe has made you her residuary legatee, which means a very considerable fortune to you. He was a witness to her will, signed four months ago. I only tell you this, Ethel, because I love you so that I cannot bear to see you wooed by a man who only loves you for the money you will possess. Ethel, will you be my wife?"

"Leave me," she blazed out. "How can you tell me that it is for money only that I can be loved?"

He stammered an excuse, but she silenced him.

That night Mrs. Pardoe's illness assumed a more serious character, and she died before morning.

On the will being read after the funeral, it was found that Ethel Mary Walton was appointed "residuary legatee."

"I wish a good round sum had been mentioned," said Dr. Westwood to old Mr. Somers as he was tying up his papers. "The 'residue' may turn out to be half a crown when all is settled up."

"She will have about $75,000," said the lawyer dryly. "Miss Walton," he continued, "cannot be persuaded to stay in the neighborhood. She dislikes the place and leaves for good today."

* * * * * * *

The battle of Tel-el-Kebir had been fought.

Among the first over the enemy's intrenchments was Philip Somers of the Forty-sixth Highlanders, but as he scrambled to the top he got his death wound and fell heavily on the other side. Then the tide of battle surged back.

No one seemed to have noticed his fall. But the young doctor who had so lately come out had seen his perilous position.

Quick as thought he sprang over the embankment, raised his burden and bore the wounded man out of harm's way.

But Philip Somers was beyond his skill. He recognized his protector, and a spasm passed over his pain drawn face.

"Westwood," he gasped, "she loves you. But I told her you know of the legacy and only wanted her money."

"Whom?" asked Richard.

"Ethel," said the faint voice. "Before the governor found out I had been going the pace, and I enlisted"—

It was some time before Dr. Westwood could be spared, and then, hurrying to his tent, he found that Philip Somers had gone to stand before the great Judge to whom we must all some day render an account.

A nurse was performing for him the last sad offices. The quiet face opposite him was in shadow, the lips moved as if in prayer.

Suddenly the eyes were raised, and he saw before him the girl he had sought so long, and in that one look each read the other's heart.—London News.

Costly Politeness.

At the battle of Fontenoy occurred a well known instance of politeness on the part of the English and French guards, which, it is almost needless to say, could only have happened in those ceremonious times. The two battalions of opposing guards were about to join in conflict when the English commander advanced and saluting the French commander exclaimed, "Gentlemen of the French guards, fire!"

The French officer, not to be outdone in politeness, returned the salute and replied: "After you, gentlemen. The French guards never fire first!" Upon which the English gentleman, thinking further ceremony needless fired, with such effect as to put nearly 900 of the French gentlemen hors de combat. Somewhat costly politeness for them.—Chambers' Journal.

A Nudge Under the Table.

James Payn tells in a recent London letter how Dickens was present at a dinner where Dr. De Mussy, Louis Philippe's physician, happened to bring up the subject of spontaneous combustion. He did not know that "Bleak House," then coming out in parts, contained a case of it, and made some contemptuous remarks upon the impossibility of it before Mr. Payn managed to give him a kick on the shin. "I confess however," he went on, "that I have not given the matter any particular attention." "I thought not," said Dickens smiling, and proceeding to name half a dozen authorities on which he had crammed up for the occasion. Mr. Payn thinks that if it had not been for his timely kick there would have been some spontaneous combustion at that dinner table.

REORGANIZATION OF Erie System,

Under Plan and Agreement dated August 20, 1895.

To the Holders of New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad Company's New Second Consolidated Mortgage Bonds; Second Consolidated Mortgage Funded Coupon Bonds; Funded Coupon Bonds of 1885; Income Bonds; and Chicago & Erie Railroad Company's Income Bonds.

NEW YORK, September 27, 1895.

All holders of the above-mentioned bonds commonly known as

"Erie Second Consols,"
"Erie Funded Coupon 5s,"
"Erie Incomes,"
"Chicago & Erie Incomes"

are notified to deposit same on or before Friday,

October 25, 1895,

with either of the depositaries named in said plan, viz: Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall street, New York, or Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., 22 Old Broad street, London. Bonds not deposited on or before that date will be received only on such terms as the Committee may hereafter determine.

As the foreclosure sale of the Erie property has been fixed for November 6, prompt action by bondholders is essential.

If you have trouble in reading this ad. it is your own fault. It's easy enough if you will give him a trial. PENHEIMER will sell you your WINTER OUTFITS at a lower figure than any other merchant if you give it a trial. Just as easy as it is to prove to you that SAM OP-

ELOQUENT SAM SMALL

DRAWS BIG AUDIENCE TO THE COURT HOUSE THURSDAY NIGHT.

He Talks in the Interest of the Prohibition Cause and Is Quite Entertaining. Hot Shot Thrown into Republican and Democratic Ranks.

It is quite evident that the fame of Rev Sam Small had preceded him to this city for a larger or finer audience has seldom assembled in the court house to hear a speaker than that which greeted the advocate of prohibition, Thursday night.

The crowd was but little smaller than that which was out to hear Campbell on the 11th inst., but comparison must stop at that point for in the matter of quality the Campbell speech could no more compare with Sam Small's effort than a tallow candle can contend against a 2000 candle power arc light

Small is a speaker beyond the question of a doubt and, more than that, he is a prince among speakers, and it was his reputation as such that brought out the great audience that heard him Thursday night, for only a small portion of his hearers were followers of the prohibition standard, the great bulk of them being adherents of the old parties which he so unmercilessly assailed

Many are acquainted with the personal appearance and the style of Rev Mr. Small, but to such as are not a short description of him as he appeared at the court house may not be out of place.

Faultlessly attired in evening dress, Mr Small gives the impression that he is in the vicinity of the half century mark, the presence of a gray hair here and there, and heavy wrinkles doing to strengthen the impression, for his erect and sprightly bearing would indicate a much younger man

While he is in no way robust he is yet fairly well developed and possesses that grace and activity which come only with muscles well trained and under perfect control Mr. Small wears glasses and mars his face with a heavy brown mustache which completely covers his mouth and a goodly portion of his chin

He has his voice as well as his features under perfect control and while possessing a wonderful power as an earnest speaker yet has a strain of humor that, being displayed, kept his audience in an almost continuous burst of laughter and applause for over two hours

Besides being an orator and a humorist he is something of a mimic and can imitate anything from the song of a canary to the din of a saw mill.

It would be impossible to even attempt an outline of his address as delivered here It was a combination of cleverly told stories abounding in wit and humor and always in perfect illustration of the point which he sought to make, plain, interspersed with hot-shot fired broadcast into the followers of the republican and democratic guidons.

He discussed the party platform and portrayed it in its most fascinating colors and at the same time held the platforms of the old parties up before his hearers in such a style as is possible only to speakers of the ability and wit of a Small.

His denunciation of the liquor evil was one of the strongest imaginable but yet was so interspersed with anecdote and story, always pat and to the point, that even those whom he assailed, and they were the church going and church praying people generally, who prayed to the Supreme One, as he said, to root out an evil which they themselves had planted and were nourishing, and which they were perfectly able to overcome that even they could not take offense.

Summed up in a sentence, it was a great speech, a masterly effort and with it went a ring of truth which would lead the hearer to respect the principles, no matter what he might think of the advocates of prohibition.

GOING TO COLUMBUS

The Marion Bushnell Club Will Attend the Big Rally.

The Marion Bushnell club, organized last Tuesday night will go to Columbus as a body, Saturday night, leaving on the Short Line train at 5:55 and returning at 11 o'clock. The People's band has been engaged to accompany the club All Republicans are invited, by the way to join the delegation

Members of the club will meet at headquarters over the Bee Front, at 5 o'clock Saturday and all who can will come with walking sticks Badges will be provided for all who go The railroad fare for the round trip will be 50 cents.

There will be an informal meeting of the club tonight, to further arrangements for the trip

CYDERS—WILSON

Charles Cyders and Miss Virginia Wilson Married Near Morral.

Charles D Cyders, of this city, and Miss Virginia A Wilson, were married at the home of the bride's father, Robert Wilson two miles south of Morral, Thursday evening, October 17 Rev. L. F Reading, of LaRue, officiated

The bride is the only daughter of Robert Wilson, a well-to-do farmer, and is very popular and much esteemed, and the groom is an industrious and worthy young man of this city

Mr and Mrs. Cyders will make their home in Marion

Preparing for the Road.

Mr and Mrs R J Diegle returned Thursday night from Chicago, where they have been to secure a wardrobe for their hall attraction this winter, and no finer wardrobes were ever seen in this city

Mr Diegle will give a fine attraction during the winter season He will carry about the same company that he had last year. Ollie Young the clever little juggler, who was here with the Elks' circus, and who made such a hit with Colonel Diegle last year, will leave Barlow Brothers' minstrels and join the Diegle show Mr Young evidently knows a good thing when he sees it and will remain with Mr Diegle throughout the year. He will handle standard remedies and has a gift enterprise Mr. Diegle will very probably give his opening performance at Mt Victory in two weeks.

Talking of a Fair.

Cooper Post, G A R, is contemplating a very novel entertainment and one that would be interesting, and no doubt would prove a paying enterprise for the post

The idea at present is to give a fair, which is to take place within the next month. There would be the usual articles to sell at the fair, but as an attraction there would be a display of war relics There are enough relics of the late Rebellion in this city to make a fine display if they were all together, and they would be well worth seeing

Dr. Gailey's Condition.

A letter from Mrs. C P Gailey, written at Chicago yesterday, states that the doctor's attack of pneumonia has run a very rapid course and should there be no relapse within forty-eight hours he will be out of danger. His right lung has been seriously involved but his left is not seriously affected The doctor's many friends here hope he will pull through, but they will not feel secure until his full recovery is announced
